I. Summary:

SB 146 authorizes the payment of certain due process costs when a court-appointed pro bono¹ attorney represents a dependent child with special needs. These due process costs are the costs of court reporting and transcriptions, expert witnesses, mental health professionals, reasonable pretrial consultation fees and costs, and certain travel expenses.

Currently, a court-appointed pro bono attorney is not entitled to funds for due process costs. In contrast, a private court-appointed attorney who is paid for his or her services in these cases is permitted to access due process costs. Under the bill, the Justice Administrative Commission will review and pay due process costs for pro bono attorneys as it does for compensated attorneys under current law.

II. Present Situation:

Legal Representation for Dependent Children With Special Needs

In 2014, the Legislature determined that a dependent child with certain special needs is entitled to legal representation during all phases of a dependency case. This legal representation begins as early as when the child is removed from the home or the initial appointment is made and continues through any appellate proceedings. The continuous legal representation permits the attorney to address the child's medical and related needs and ensures that the appropriate services and supports are obtained for the child to live successfully in the community.²

¹ Pro bono is from the Latin phrase pro bono publico meaning "for the public good" and has come to mean uncompensated legal services performed for the public good. BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 1220 (10th ed. 2014).

² Section 39.01305(1)(a)2., F.S.

Dependent Children with Special Needs³

Section 39.01305(3), F.S., requires the court to appoint an attorney to represent a dependent child with certain special needs. A child has a qualifying special need if the child:

- Resides in a skilled nursing facility or is being considered for placement in a skilled nursing home;
- Is prescribed, but does not take, a psychotropic medication;
- Is diagnosed with a developmental disability;⁴
- Is being placed or considered for placement in a residential treatment center; or
- Is a victim of human trafficking.⁵

Procedure for Appointing an Attorney

The statutes establish priorities for selecting a court-appointed attorney to represent a dependent special needs child. In an effort to minimize expenses to the state, a pro bono attorney must first be sought to represent the child before a paid attorney or organization may be requested.

The court must initially request the Statewide Guardian Ad Litem Office to recommend an attorney who is willing to serve without compensation. If a pro bono attorney is available to serve within 15 days after the court's request, the court must appoint that attorney, thereby avoiding costs.⁶ However, if the Statewide Guardian Ad Litem office is unable to recommend an attorney within the 15-day period, the court may appoint a compensated attorney within that time period.⁷ Once the court appoints an attorney, the appointment continues until the attorney is permitted to withdraw, is discharged by the court, or the case is dismissed.⁸

An attorney or legal aid organization that is willing to serve for compensation is selected from a registry of names maintained by the chief judge in the circuit. These attorneys and organizations must be adequately compensated and also provided with access to funding for expert witnesses, depositions, and other costs of litigation. The legal fees and compensation for litigation costs are subject to appropriations and subject to review by the Justice Administrative Commission⁹ for

³ Staff attempted to determine the current number of children who are classified as a "dependent child with disabilities." The information is not available from the Department of Children and Families. This number fluctuates regularly as children come in and out of care. However, recent data, collected at various times, has stated that approximately 12 children were in skilled nursing facilities, 265 children were diagnosed with developmental disabilities, and 130 children were in residential treatment centers. Staff was unable to discern how many children were not taking prescribed psychotropic medication or were victims of human trafficking.

⁴ A developmental disability is a disorder or syndrome attributable to intellectual disability, cerebral palsy, autism, spina bifida, Down syndrome, Phelan-McDermid syndrome, or Prader-Willi syndrome; that manifests before the age of 18; and that constitutes a substantial handicap that can reasonably be expected to continue indefinitely. s. 393.063(12), F.S.

⁵ Section 787.06(2)(d), F.S., defines human trafficking as the transporting, soliciting, recruiting, harboring, providing, enticing, maintaining, or obtaining another person to exploit that person.

⁹ The Justice Administrative Commission administratively serves the offices of the state attorneys, public defenders, and other judicial-related offices. The commission processes accounting, budget, financial, and human resource transactions for these offices. The commission also processes bills for services provided by private court-appointed attorneys who represent indigent defendants as well as for associated due process service vendors such as court reporters, investigators, and expert reasonableness. The attorney fees may not exceed $1,000 per year per child.¹⁰ There is no statutory cap on the amount of due process costs that may be expended, but their availability along with attorney fees is subject to appropriations expressly made for those purposes.¹¹

Due Process Costs

These litigation costs are often referred to as “due process costs” and are defined to include the costs of court reporting and transcripts, witnesses, mental health professionals, reasonable pretrial consultation fees and costs, and certain travel expenses.¹² The attorney who serves for compensation is paid for his or her legal services and the accompanying due process costs are reviewed and paid by the Justice Administrative Commission. In contrast, there is no statutory authority to pay the due process costs incurred when a pro bono attorney is involved. Accordingly, the pro bono attorney is not paid for his or her legal service and the attendant costs are not paid by the Justice Administrative Commission.

The Justice Administrative Commission¹³ reports the following fiscal year payments for due process costs and attorney fees for dependent children with special needs:

Fiscal Year	Due Process Costs	Attorney Fees
2014-2015	$6,402	$761,024
2015-2016	$3,606	$1,133,682
2016-2017	$16,998	$1,642,510
Total	$27,006	$3,537,216

III. Effect of Proposed Changes:

SB 146 authorizes a court-appointed pro bono attorney who represents a dependent child with special needs to receive funding for due process costs. Currently, payment of these expenses is not authorized by statute. In contrast, payment of due process costs is authorized when the costs are incurred by a court-appointed private attorney whose legal fees are paid by the state. Payment of the case-related due process costs is subject to appropriations and review by the Justice Administration Commission.

The bill takes effect upon becoming a law.

V. Fiscal Impact Statement:A. Tax/Fee Issues:

None.

B. Private Sector Impact:

If pro bono attorneys are currently paying due process costs from their own resources, this measure could result in savings to them because the due process costs will now be paid by the Justice Administrative Commission.

C. Government Sector Impact:

According to the Justice Administrative Commission, this bill has an indeterminate fiscal impact on the Commission.¹⁴ However, by making funding for due process costs available to pro bono attorneys, more attorneys may volunteer to represent children with special needs. An increased availability of pro bono attorneys may reduce expenditures on compensated attorneys.
