I. FINAL ACTION STATUS:

“HB 3977 did not pass the 1998 Legislative session, but the substance of the bill passed as part of HB 4315. See comments section for bill history. See Final Bill Research Statement for HB 4315.”

II. SUMMARY:

HB 3977 would prohibit a state agency from expanding the Orlando Regional Detention Center or from building a new detention or commitment center on property contiguous to the existing center. A state agency could not use property contiguous to the existing center to operate a detention center or commitment facility.

The act would become effective on the date of enactment.

III. SUBSTANTIVE RESEARCH:

A. PRESENT SITUATION:

Section 985.03, Florida Statutes, defines detention centers as facilities designed for the temporary care of a child alleged or found to have committed a violation of law. Detention centers house youth awaiting an adjudicatory hearing or a post disposition commitment placement.

The DJJ developed a risk assessment instrument to determine whether youth being detained by authorized law enforcement personnel or by authorized DJJ staff are eligible for home, non-secure or secure detention care. A detention hearing is held within 24 hours of detaining a youth to determine the existence of probable cause that a delinquent act was committed and to determine the need for continued detention. A court of jurisdiction may order a child placed in detention care prior to a detention hearing to continue to be held if one or more of the following criteria are met:

- a child is an escapee or an absconder
- a child is wanted for a felony charge in another jurisdiction
- a child requests to be detained for protection from imminent physical threat
- a child is charged with committing a domestic violence offense
- a child is charged with a life, capital or first degree felony or a second degree felony that does not involve a substance abuse violation or a third degree felony that is also a violent crime
- a child is charged with a second or third degree felony involving a substance abuse violation
- a child is charged with a third degree felony that is not a crime of violence and one or more of the following circumstances exists:
  - A record of failure to appear in court
  - A history of law violations prior to court hearings
  - A record of violent conduct resulting in physical injury to others
  - a child is found to have been in possession of a firearm
- a child is alleged to have violated the provisions of community control or aftercare

A youth may not be held for more than 21 days unless an adjudicatory hearing for the case has been commenced by the court of jurisdiction, nor may a youth be held in detention for more than 15 days following the entry of an order of adjudication.

Under the provisions of s. 985.215, Florida Statutes, youth committed to the DJJ and awaiting dispositional placement must be removed from detention care within five days of the original detainment. In addition, a court must place all children adjudicated and awaiting placement in a Level VIII or X commitment program in detention care. The average statewide secure detention population is 2,133 as reported by the Juvenile Justice Advisory Board (JJAB) in their 1998 Annual Report and Juvenile Justice Fact Book. This number well exceeds the 1,644 beds available in the 21 detention centers.

In 1997, the DJJ released a report entitled, the State of Detention in Florida. The DJJ reviewed and evaluated each secure detention center and recommended improvements to the current facilities and their functions. The DJJ documented security and safety limitations in the 21 secure detention centers operating in Florida. It cited lack of modern surveillance and monitoring equipment and state-of-the-art security features as obstacles to proper containment.

Furthermore, many centers suffer from lack of adequate maintenance and repair. The DJJ reported a need for major repairs such as roofing, cooling and ventilation systems and kitchen equipment. The need for improved facilities grows even more apparent when comparing the increase in juvenile delinquents to the housing capacity of secure detention centers. Many of the centers built in the 1970s and 1980s have not been upgraded to keep pace with the growing delinquent population. The DJJ reported that from fiscal year 1990-91 to fiscal year 1995-96 there has been a 70% increase in detention admissions.

The DJJ also cited the lack of consistent educational and other programs within secure detention centers. Section 985.213, Florida Statutes stipulates that each child placed in secure detention will receive education commensurate with his grade level and educational ability.

Many of the secure detention centers experience a high turnover rate in detention care staff. The problems most notably attributing to the turnover rate are lack of qualified staff and training programs, little opportunity for upward mobility, minimal pay and inadequate benefits. The DJJ reports staff turnover at approximately 25% in detention centers. Insufficient personnel and limited funds have hindered the ability of detention centers to provide appropriate health services and health facilities for youth. When youth are held in detention centers awaiting a hearing, the person in charge of the detention center may order an initial examination to determine a need for medical treatment. (Section 985.224, Florida Statutes).

The Orlando Regional Detention Center has been plagued by all of the problems reported by the DJJ. The facility has been overcrowded for the last two years even with the completion of a new 52 bed facility in Fall 1997. It has been operating with a detention capacity between 134.6% and 253.0%. (Secure Detention Data Trends, July 1995 - June 1997, the Department of Juvenile Justice). According to the DJJ's March 15, 1998 statistics, 151 beds are available for the 179 youth held at the center. The center is operating at a utilization rate of 119%. The average length of stay for youth is approximately 9 days.

The center was built in 1978 in a residential neighborhood. Neighborhood residential leaders in the detention center debate are concerned over what the size of the center would do to property values, quality of life, and public safety. The DJJ began to meet with the county and surrounding community to work through detention center issues and alleviate future concerns. The DJJ agreed to construct and completed a scenic buffer wall around the detention center.

The wall, although consistent with department standards, is not constructed to the specifications agreed upon by the DJJ, the county, and affected residents. The original design was for a solid gray block wall standing eight feet high with interior lighting for nighttime security. (Additional information collected from an interview with Joseph Gillespie, Legislative Assistant to Representative Bill Sublette). The Criminal Justice Appropriations Act, HB 4207, would require the DJJ to reconstruct the scenic buffer wall to the original specifications prior to utilizing any funds appropriated for department expenses, if enacted.

B. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

HB 3977 would prohibit a state agency from expanding the Orlando Regional Detention Center or from building a new detention or commitment center on property contiguous to the existing center. It would go even further to prohibit any state agency from using property contiguous to the existing center to operate a detention center or commitment facility. The bill would limit the DJJ's ability to expand the existing center without first obtaining Legislative approval.
