I. SUMMARY:

THIS DOCUMENT IS NOT INTENDED TO BE USED FOR THE PURPOSE OF CONSTRUING STATUTES, OR TO BE CONSTRUED AS AFFECTING, DEFINING, LIMITING, CONTROLLING, SPECIFYING, CLARIFYING, OR MODIFYING ANY LEGISLATION OR STATUTE.

House Bill 1821 creates s. 39.320, F.S., to establish the Commission on Florida Families within the Department of Children and Family Services (DCF). The new commission replaces the Commission on Responsible Fatherhood, which is abolished. The purposes of the Commission on Florida Families are to develop comprehensive statewide strategies to facilitate the connection or reconnection of responsible fathers with their families and children, to increase the availability of and access to parenting and relationship skills education and training, and to encourage and support the formation and maintenance of two-parent families.

Subject to availability of funds, the Commission on Florida Families is charged with the development of statewide plans concerning delivery of services and supports to couples and parents, collection and dissemination of information relating to poverty and its effect on families, and making annual recommendations to the Legislature. The bill provides for coordination with other organizations and entities and authorizes the appointment of advisory committees.

The bill provides $500,000 in funding for the commission from moneys currently appropriated to the DCF and Department of Health for the Commission on Responsible Fatherhood. The bill, also authorizes the commission to seek other funding through grants and gifts.

The bill abolishes the Commission on Responsible Fatherhood and repeals sections 383.0112, 383.0113, and 383.0114, F.S.

The effective date of the bill is July 1, 2002.

On February 21, 2002, the Committee on Child and Family Security adopted a strike-everything amendment to the bill. It renames the Commission on Florida Families as the Commission on Marriage and Family Support Initiatives, substantially amends findings and intent to emphasize help to both fathers and mothers, to support marriage and two parent families, to expand commission membership, and to redirect the scope of activity. Provides for repeal on June 30, 2007, unless reenacted.

B. PRESENT SITUATION:

Florida Commission on Responsible Fatherhood

The Florida Commission on Responsible Fatherhood was established by the Legislature in 1996, in sections 383.0112, 383.0113, and 383.0114, F.S. Based on a national model, the commission's purpose was to develop comprehensive statewide strategies to address fatherhood issues. The commission identified strategies to increase parental involvement, child support, and employment of fathers. Since 1996, when 33 percent of Florida's children did not live in the same home as their father, Florida has funded 27 programs serving fathers in over 30 counties. The commission has primarily supported two types of programs: those that assist low-income, non-custodial fathers to become employed, pay their child support and to be more knowledgeable and involved dads; and local health, childcare, and prison-related programs that involve fathers in the lives of their children.

The commission includes members of the legislative, executive and judicial branches of government, and the public. The commission receives $250,000 from the DCF and $250,000 from the DOH to help raise awareness of fatherhood issues, identify obstacles for fathers' involvement in the lives of their children, and test strategies to encouraging responsible fatherhood.

Florida Welfare Reform to Support Families

The Florida Commission on Responsible Fatherhood is one component of the initiatives the Florida Legislature has established to support families. Florida was one of the first states to use the 1996 Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Reconciliation, Welfare Reform Act, to strengthen families. The Welfare Reform Act had several goals, one of which was to encourage the formation and maintenance of two-parent families, although there were no guidelines, incentives, or sanctions to help states reach this goal. Few states designed policies to help poor families stay together. Florida's Work and Gain Economic Self-sufficiency (WAGES) Program, which placed time limits on cash assistance and provided child care, education, and job training, took an important and successful step toward helping low-income families become and remain self-sufficient.

In the Workforce Innovation Act of 2000, Florida took welfare reform a step further to support families. With fewer than 32,000 families across the state still receiving cash assistance, the Legislature consolidated many federal and state job training, employment support, and welfare transition programs, to provide better support for working families and improve workforce development. One purpose of Workforce Florida is to provide training and other support to help families move out of low-wage jobs and establish a more secure future.

Combining Fatherhood and Family Issues

Nationally, there are two primary approaches to strengthening families. One approach is to strengthen marriage by toughening divorce laws and premarital counseling, rewriting tax laws to eliminate the marriage penalty, and favoring marriage in public policy. The other approach focuses primarily on low-income dads, adding employment training and other services to the present child support enforcement strategies, and to reform child support laws to give never-married, non-custodial parents the same rights as divorced dads. This latter approach maintains marriage cannot help a minority male constituency that is often not ready for marriage, is uneducated, and lacks adequate work skills and employment to meet their family support responsibilities. It is a common value of both approaches that children do better in families with two parents.

The Need to Address Fragile Families

New approaches that integrate these efforts at addressing marriage, family and fatherhood issues to low-income fathers and mothers as a vulnerable family rather than opposing entities show promise in helping children grow and develop with two involved parents.

Studies have found men and women of all socioeconomic groups share society's values that define success as having a stable job and belonging to a family. Although many low-income couples are unmarried, research finds they begin in committed relationships and consider marriage and dual parenting as ideal for a child's development. It is in living up to these values that so many fall short. Low-income males especially have difficulty realizing the goal of having a stable job that would enable them to support a family. They are also uncertain about what is expected of them as fathers—particularly because many have entered manhood without the benefit of an involved father.

Research has shown that most poor children under the age of two have a highly involved father, even though only half of them were born to married parents. At the birth of their children, 80 percent of low-income parents were romantically involved, and more than half were cohabitating. More than 90 percent of new fathers provided financial or in-kind support for the mother during pregnancy. Almost 70 percent of fathers visited their newborn in the hospital and more than 80 percent of these fathers expressed their intent to continue providing support.

Unfortunately, paternal involvement among poor children drops precipitously as children get older. By the time they reach their teens, only 19 percent of them live with their two natural, married parents, while 59 percent live with their mothers and see their fathers less than weekly.

Supports to strengthen fragile families include opportunities to obtain or increase educational levels and employment skills, and easy and affordable access to relationship skills education. For some unwed parents, it is possible and desirable to help them move towards marriage; for others who are in new relationships, the optimum goal may be to help them co-parent, spend time with their child, and pay child support regularly.

C. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

This bill creates s. 39.320, F.S., to establish the Commission on Florida Families within the Department of Children and Family Services. The purposes of the commission are to develop comprehensive statewide strategies to facilitate the connection or reconnection of responsible fathers with their families and children, to increase the availability of and access to parenting and relationship skills education and training, and to encourage and support the formation and maintenance of two-parent families. It provides legislative findings and intent to encourage marriage and support families. It establishes responsibilities for the commission and provides for the commission's funding. The bill provides for coordination with other organizations and entities and authorizes the appointment of advisory committees. The bill repeals ss. 383.0112, 383.0113, and 383.0114, F.S., relating to the Commission on Responsible Fatherhood and community-based programs to encourage responsible fatherhood.

D. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS:

Section 1. Creates s. 39.320, Florida Statutes, establishing the Commission on Florida Families.

(1) Legislative Findings and Intent—to encourage and support marriage and two-parent families that provide support for children through better health and educational opportunities and avoidance of drugs and criminal behavior.

The legislative intent of the bill is to provide policy direction to encourage, promote, and value strong, safe, long-term marriages and particularly in situations where there are children, by helping those individuals who choose marriage obtain access to what they need to sustain a healthy marriage, and by being compassionate towards other family situations.

(2) Establishes the Commission on Florida Families within the Department of Children and Family Services, and provides for membership.

(3) Establishes Purposes and Responsibilities—to develop statewide strategies to encourage formation of two-parent families and parenting. Subject to available funds the commission is directed to:

- Develop a plan to implement s. 232.246 (1) (i), F.S., relating to marriage and relationship training.
- Develop a plan to support mediation skills to couples prior to and during marriage and in the event of divorce.
- Develop in conjunction with the Department of Revenue a balance between welfare cost recovery and helping families become self-supporting.
- Serve as a clearinghouse for information on poverty and its effects on families and innovative approaches to formation and maintenance.
- Make recommendations to the Legislature.

(4) Requires coordination with community-based organizations and research and policy centers.

(5) Provides for advisory committees to be appointed by the commission.

(6) Establishes a funding source for the commission, by redirecting General Revenue currently allocated to the Commission on Responsible Fatherhood to the Commission on Florida Families, and provides that the commission may accept other funding.

Section 2. Repeals sections 383.0112, 383.0113, and 383.0114, F.S., establishing Florida's Commission on Responsible Fatherhood.

Section 3. Provides the act shall take effect July 1, 2002.

VI. AMENDMENTS OR COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE CHANGES:

On February 21, 2002, the Committee on Child and Family Security adopted a strike-everything amendment to the bill that incorporated two technical amendments.

Section 1. Creates s. 39.320, F.S.,—The Commission on Marriage and Family Support Initiatives—Instead of the Commission on Florida Families.

(1) Legislative Findings and Intent is substantially amended. The amendment emphasizes intent to help both fathers and mothers and to encourage and to support marriage and two parent families. The findings and intent include helping low-income parents, not forcing parents into bad marriages nor withdrawing support from single mothers. It finds congruence with federal policy.

(2) Establishment of Commission is amended to expand representation on the commission and provide for staggered terms and semi-annual meetings without compensation, but with travel reimbursement.

(3) Scope of Activity is to report on strategies to support nurturing and responsible parenting and access to skills education and training, produce a manual and a community awareness campaign for communities on promising practices to promote marriage and serve as a clearinghouse on research on the effects of poverty and violence on families and innovative approaches to services for formation and maintenance of strong families with an annual progress report. Provides for repeal on June 30, 2007, unless reenacted.

(4) Coordination is required with community-based organizations, other agencies and research and policy centers.

(5) Funding is provided from funds currently allocated to the Commission on Responsible Fatherhood.

Section 2. Repeals s. 383.0112, 383.0113, 383.0114, F.S., that establish the Commission on Responsible Fatherhood.

Section 3. The effective date for the bill is July 1, 2002.
