SUMMARY ANALYSIS

This joint resolution creates Article X, section 22 of the State Constitution which provides that the Legislature may, notwithstanding the state constitutional right to privacy, enact legislation requiring notification of a parent or guardian of a minor prior to the performance of an abortion on the minor. The amendment provides that the Legislature shall not limit or deny the privacy rights guaranteed to minors under the United States Constitution as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court. The amendment provides that the right to notification shall not apply to minors emancipated by general law.

Pursuant to Article XI, section 1 of the State Constitution, amendments to the constitution may be proposed by joint resolution agreed to by three-fifths of the membership of each house of the Legislature. The proposed amendment shall then be submitted to the electors at the next general election held more than ninety days after the joint resolution is filed with the custodian of state records, unless it is submitted at an earlier special election pursuant to a law enacted by an affirmative vote of three-fourths of the membership of each house of the Legislature and limited to a single amendment or revision, pursuant to Article XI, section 5.

This joint resolution appears to have minimal fiscal impact on the state.

This document does not reflect the intent or official position of the bill sponsor or House of Representatives.

B. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

Since 1972 when the United States Supreme Court decided Roe v. Wade<sup>1</sup>, state legislatures have been testing the Constitutional limits on their authority to impose restrictions on abortions. The Roe v. Wade decision was premised upon the right of privacy which the Court held to be a “fundamental right” encompassing a woman’s decision to terminate her pregnancy. Whenever a “fundamental right” is involved, regulations limiting that right are subject to strict scrutiny, justified by a “compelling state interest” that must be narrowly drawn to express only that interest.

Since the Roe decision, the Supreme Court has retreated somewhat from its position and no longer refers to the right to abortion as a “fundamental right.” The Court has also shifted the standard against which it evaluates state regulatory provisions restricting abortions from a “strict scrutiny” standard to a less rigorous “undue burden” standard. Some of the most common restrictions on abortion require a minor choosing to have an abortion to notify, or obtain the consent of, a parent before the abortion can be performed.

Although the right to abortion may not be considered a “fundamental right” at the federal level, it does not necessarily mean it is not a “fundamental right” at the state level. Under the rule commonly referred to as the “adequate and independent state ground doctrine,” a federal court will not disturb a state court judgment that is based on an adequate and independent state ground provided the result is not violative of the federal Constitution. The federal Constitution serves as a minimum level of guaranteed rights, and the states, in interpreting their own constitutions, are free to guarantee a higher level of protection. When states do guarantee a higher level of protection, federal courts do not have jurisdiction to review these decisions, as long as the state ground is both adequate and independent. Florida is one of only five states that has its own express constitutional provision raising the level of protection of the federal Constitution and guaranteeing an independent right to privacy. Such provisions can make a crucial difference in determining whether a statute is constitutional because the statute in question must pass muster under both the federal and state constitutions.

In 1980, Florida citizens voted in general elections to amend the State Constitution to provide for a right of privacy. Art. 1, Sec 23 of the Florida Constitution reads:

Right of privacy.-- Every natural person has the right to be let alone and free from governmental intrusion into his private life except as otherwise provided herein. This section shall not be construed to limit the public’s right of access to public records and meetings as provided by law.

The Florida Supreme Court has determined that “the amendment embraces more privacy interests, and extends more protection to the individual in those interests, than does the federal Constitution.”<sup>2</sup> The Florida Supreme Court also held that the state’s right of privacy:

is a fundamental right which we believe demands the compelling state interest standard. This test shifts the burden of proof to the state to justify an intrusion on privacy. The burden can be met by demonstrating that the challenged regulation serves a compelling state interest and accomplishes its goal through the use of the least intrusive means.<sup>3</sup>

In the case of In re T.W.,<sup>4</sup> the Florida Supreme Court concluded, “based on the unambiguous language of the amendment” that, since minors are natural persons, they should be afforded the same fundamental right of privacy. To overcome these constitutional rights, a statute imposing on a minor’s rights must survive the test set out in Winfield: The state must prove that the statute furthers a compelling state interest through the least intrusive means.<sup>5</sup>

In the case of In re T.W., the court was faced with the question of whether a state statute requiring parental consent for the abortion of a minor violated the express constitutional right of privacy in the State Constitution. Finding that “Florida’s privacy provision is clearly implicated in a woman’s decision of whether or not to continue her pregnancy,” the court ruled the statute unconstitutional. Rejecting the federal test that a state’s interest must only be “significant,” the court adopted the Florida standard that the interest be “compelling.” The court concluded that neither the interest in protecting minors nor the interest in preserving family unity was sufficiently compelling under Florida law to override Florida’s privacy amendment. The parental consent statute also did not pass the test of the least intrusive means of furthering the state interest. The statute did not make provisions for a lawyer for the minor or for a record hearing, which the court felt were necessary for providing an adequate judicial bypass procedure.

Recently, the Florida Supreme Court struck down a statute which required a minor to notify her parents prior to undergoing an abortion, or convince a court that she is sufficiently mature to make the decision herself, or that if she is immature, that the abortion is nevertheless in her best interests.<sup>6</sup> In the opinion for the Court, Justice Shaw opined that the law failed to further a compelling state interest in light of the fact that since In re T.W. was decided, virtually nothing had changed in the statutory provisions authorizing less restrictive treatment of other comparable procedures and practices. Justice Lewis, who concurred in result only, wrote that the effect of the majority opinion is to prohibit the state from ever acting to protect the health and welfare of minors through involvement of parents in the reproductive arena.<sup>7</sup>

Under the rulings of the Florida Supreme Court, minors in Florida have privacy rights that go beyond those protected under the federal Constitution. Parental rights are protected by implication under both the federal and State Constitutions. The United States Supreme Court has held that one of the guaranteed liberty interests protected by the Fourteenth Amendment is the right to bring up children.<sup>8</sup> Similarly, the Florida Supreme Court has found that the State Constitution’s right to privacy indirectly protects the fundamental right of parents to raise their children, absent a showing of harm.<sup>9</sup>

Thus constitutional tension is created when the privacy rights of parents to raise their children conflicts with the privacy rights of minors to obtain an abortion. This joint resolution resolves the conflict by providing that the Legislature may not limit or deny the privacy rights guaranteed to minors under the United States Constitution as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, and by authorizing the Legislature to enact by general law, a requirement that a parent or guardian be notified prior to the performance of an abortion on a minor, notwithstanding the minor's right to privacy under Article 1, section 23 of the State Constitution. The right to notification shall not apply to minors emancipated by general law.

II. FISCAL ANALYSIS & ECONOMIC IMPACT STATEMENT

A. FISCAL IMPACT ON STATE GOVERNMENT:

1. Revenues:

None.

2. Expenditures:

The State Constitution requires that a proposed amendment to the constitution be published in one newspaper of general circulation in each county in which a newspaper is published, once in the tenth week and once in the sixth week immediately preceding the week in which the election is held.<sup>10</sup> The Division of Elections estimates that the cost of compliance would be approximately $35,000.<sup>11</sup>

III. COMMENTS

A. CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES:

1. Applicability of Municipality/County Mandates Provision:

This joint resolution does not require counties or municipalities to spend funds or take an action requiring the expenditure of funds; reduce the authority to raise revenues; or reduce the percentage of a state tax shared with cities or counties.

2. Other:

- Accuracy of the ballot summary: The ballot summary must be sufficient to provide fair notice of the contents and effect of the amendment.<sup>12</sup> Further, the ballot summary must fully advise the electorate of all consequences of the proposal;<sup>13</sup> and cannot be misleading or ambiguous.<sup>14</sup> This ballot summary appears to meet constitutional requirements.
- While the provision for parental notice legislation expressly negates the privacy rights of minors, individuals might argue that state due process requirements would limit any legislation enacted under this constitutional provision, similar to arguments made under the federal Constitution. Nonetheless, this constitutional amendment's express authorization of parental notice legislation should overcome any state constitutional challenges. Any federal challenge would not be so limited however, and such legislation would have to comply with all federal constitutional standards.

IV. AMENDMENTS/COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE CHANGES

HJR 1 was referred directly to the House Calendar on March 1, 2004. The bill was read a second time on March 3, 2004, at which time the House adopted two amendments:

- Amendment 077981 by Representative Murman, which expressly provided that the legislature shall not limit or deny the reproductive and privacy rights guaranteed to minors under the United States Constitution as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, and that the Legislature may by general law require notification of a parent or guardian of a minor prior to the performance of an abortion on the minor notwithstanding the minor's right to privacy as provided in Article I, section 23 of the State Constitution.
- Amendment 776497 by Representatives Seiler and others, which amended the ballot summary language to put the voters on notice that the amendment provides that the Legislature shall not limit or deny the reproductive and privacy rights guaranteed to minors under the United States Constitution as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court, including, but not limited to, the United States Supreme Court's recognition of judicial bypass in cases of rape or incest or other criminal wrongdoing.

The bill was read a third time on March 5, 2004, at which time the bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The Judiciary Committee considered HJR 1 on March 11, 2004, and adopted one amendment by Representatives Murman and Cantens. The amendment removed the reference to 'reproductive rights of minors'; removed the ballot summary language referring to the Supreme Court's recognition of judicial bypass in cases of rape or incest or other criminal wrongdoing; and added ballot summary language that under the amendment the Legislature is not prevented from creating a judicial bypass process containing exceptions to parental notification, including, but not limited to, cases involving pregnancies caused by the father, step father, or legal guardian of the minor.

Chairman Kottkamp also ordered that all of the debate, public testimony and written documents presented at the past meetings of the Judiciary Committee regarding the issue of parental rights and notification of a minor's abortion become part of the record. Those meetings include the following:

- September 18, 2003 – Public hearing on Florida's constitutional right of privacy and parental rights in medical decisions of minor children held in Tampa, Florida.
- October 7, 2003 – Public hearing on Florida's constitutional right of privacy and parental rights in medical decisions of minor children held in Orlando, Florida.
- November 3, 2003 – Public hearing on Florida's constitutional right of privacy and parental rights in medical decisions of minor children held in Miami, Florida.
- November 19, 2003 – Consideration of HJR 159, Parental Rights, Tallahassee, Florida.
- February 17, 2004 – Consideration of HJR 159, Parental Rights, Tallahassee, Florida.
