SUMMARY ANALYSIS

The bill establishes the Florida's Future: Adolescent Health Initiatives Task Force within the Department of Health to:

- Raise awareness of the leading health indicators which impact adolescent health;
- Address the challenge of improving the health of Florida adolescents;
- Identify obstacles that impede or prevent adolescents from accessing health related services; and
- Identify strategies that are successful in encouraging optimal physical health and behavioral health in adolescents.

The bill provides definitions, legislative findings and intent, membership and operation of the task force, and specifies the responsibilities of the task force. The bill also delineates the following principles that are to guide the work of the task force:

- Adolescents should be viewed as a valued and respected asset to society;
- Programs and policies that serve adolescents should be focused on the developmental needs and tasks of adolescents, reduce racial disparities affecting adolescents, and consider those young individuals as partners rather than clients;
- Families, schools and communities should be engaged in developing environments that support adolescents;
- Adolescents should be involved in activities that enhance their competence, capacity, caring, character and civic engagement and promote self-understanding, self-worth, a sense of belonging and resiliency; and
- Services for adolescents should support their abilities and skills to become independent, self-supporting, and law abiding citizens.

There is a $200,000 appropriation to fund the Florida's Future: Adolescent Health Initiatives Task Force.

This bill becomes effective on July 1, 2004.

This document does not reflect the intent or official position of the bill sponsor or House of Representatives.

The bill expands the role of government by establishing a task force on adolescent health in the Department of Health.

B. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

Adolescence is a critical time in a child’s development that is characterized by physical, mental and emotional changes. These changes are coupled with changes in social roles, relationships and a wide range of life expectations that are crucial to both individual development and to building a foundation for success in adulthood. It is necessary for young adults to succeed at the developmental tasks of adolescence in order to lead healthy and productive adult lives.¹

The Florida Department of Health’s Child Health Strategic Planning Task Force built upon the national Healthy People 2010 initiative,² and through a comprehensive planning process, identified goals, strategic public health core functions, and sixteen leading indicators for child and youth health in Florida, as well as data sets for monitoring outcomes over time. In October of 2001, a publication, “The Health of Florida’s Children and Youth: Atlas of Key Status Indicators, Goals and Objectives for Strategic Planning,” was published and a web prototype for sharing this information was developed. This initiative for children and adolescents was developed to celebrate the potential for improved child and adolescent health through collaboration, review, and prioritization of data and seeks to move critical health issues forward by focusing on areas that can be improved through attention, organization, resources, and measurement.

On a national level, a number of organizations and groups are addressing the health needs of the adolescent population.³ The Association of Maternal and Child Health Programs (AMCHP), in collaboration with the State Adolescent Health Coordinators’ Network (SAHCN), has established an initiative, the Partnership for Adolescent Health with funding from the Annie E. Casey Foundation, to strengthen the capacity of states to support effective adolescent health programs. SAHCN is a national network of public health professionals working in or with state maternal and child health/family health programs as the designated state adolescent health coordinator. The Network’s goals focus heavily on state efforts to coordinate and improve adolescent health initiatives and programs and include:

- providing leadership, advocacy and consultation on adolescent health;
- formally supporting and strengthening sharing of ideas and strategies among state adolescent health coordinators; and

² Healthy People 2010 is a comprehensive set of disease prevention and health promotion objectives for the Nation to achieve over the first decade of the new century. Created by scientists both inside and outside of Government, it identifies a wide range of public health priorities and specific, measurable objectives.
