Provide Limited Government: This bill provides for limited government by restricting the circumstances under which local governments may take private property by eminent domain. The bill does not, however, alter the manner in which community redevelopment areas are created, funded, modified, or otherwise governed. The bill also restricts the circumstances under which private property taken by eminent domain may be transferred to private entities.

B. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

INTRODUCTION

On June 23, 2005, the United States Supreme Court issued its decision in the case of *Kelo v. City of New London*¹, concluding that the U.S. Constitution does not prohibit the City of New London from taking private property by eminent domain for the public purpose of economic development. Even though the Court's decision approved Kelo-type takings under the U.S. Constitution, the decision does not restrict the State of Florida from prohibiting takings for economic development or prohibiting transfers of property taken by eminent domain to private parties.

On June 24, 2005, House Speaker Allen Bense announced the creation of the Select Committee to Protect Private Property Rights chaired by Representative Marco Rubio. The Select Committee was tasked with reviewing Florida law in an effort to identify areas of ambiguity and recommend changes to ensure appropriate protections of property rights.

The fundamental issue raised by the Kelo decision may be summarized as follows: Under Florida law, is economic development -- which may include, but is not limited to, creating jobs and enhancing the tax base -- a valid public purpose for which private property may be taken and transferred to another private entity? In short, the Florida Constitution, Florida Statutes, and Florida Supreme Court decisions do not explicitly prohibit takings of private property for the purpose of economic development. Therefore, unless the Florida Constitution or statutes are amended, the question of whether a city or a county may take property for purposes of economic development will remain unanswered until directly addressed by the Florida Supreme Court.

While the case law and statutes do not expressly authorize takings for economic development purposes, private property rights advocates assert that current statutes authorizing the taking of private property for the public purpose of eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions within a geographical area are being used to take property that is not genuinely blighted for economic development purposes. Much of the concern expressed by property rights advocates centers around the application of the statutory definition of "blighted area" and what many perceive as vague and inappropriate criteria in the definition. On the other hand, representatives of local government assert that the statutory criteria for slum and blight are sufficiently narrow and that the power of eminent domain is rarely exercised in the community redevelopment context.

This bill addresses takings of private property outside the redevelopment context for economic development purposes by prohibiting the transfer of taken property to private parties unless the transfer qualifies as one of the listed exceptions to the prohibition. The bill significantly limits eminent domain authority in the redevelopment context by authorizing the taking of property only if conditions on the property pose an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain as evidenced by at least one factor in an enumerated list; requiring enhanced notice to property and business owners under the Community Redevelopment Act; increasing the burden of proof on the local government at the time of taking property under the Community Redevelopment Act; and requiring a circuit court reviewing a proposed taking of property located in a redevelopment area to make certain determinations without applying a presumption of correctness or extending judicial deference to the local government determinations regarding the taking. The bill does not, however, alter the manner in which community redevelopment areas are created, funded, modified, or otherwise governed.

CURRENT SITUATION

General Principles of Eminent Domain Law

"Eminent domain" may be described as the fundamental power of the sovereign to take private property for a public use without the owner's consent. The power of eminent domain is absolute, except as limited by the Federal and State Constitutions, and all private property is subject to the superior power of the government to take private property by eminent domain.

The U.S. Constitution places two general constraints on the use of eminent domain: The taking must be for a "public use" and government must pay the owner "just compensation" for the taken property.² Even though the U.S. Constitution requires private property to be taken for a "public use", the U.S. Supreme Court long ago rejected any requirement that condemned property be put into use for the general public. Instead, the Court embraced what the Court characterizes as a broader and more natural interpretation of public use as "public purpose".

As long ago as 1905, the Court upheld state statutes that resulted in the transfer of taken property from one private owner to another for a legislatively declared public purpose. Prior to Kelo, the two most significant cases regarding this type of taking were *Berman v. Parker*³ and *Hawaii Housing Authority v. Midkiff*⁴.

In 1954, the Court issued a decision in the Berman case upholding a redevelopment plan targeting a blighted area. Under the Plan, part of the taken property would be leased or sold to private parties for redevelopment. A property owner challenged the taking, arguing that his property was not blighted and that the creation of a "better balanced, more attractive community" was not a valid public use. The Court held that eliminating slum or blight conditions in a geographic area is a public purpose and that it is permissible for government to take a parcel of private property in the area even if that particular parcel is not slum or blighted. Perhaps the most important aspect of the decision is the Court's conclusion that "when the legislature has spoken, the public interest has been declared in terms well-nigh conclusive."

In 1984, the Court decided the Midkiff case in which private property owners challenged a Hawaii statute under which private properties were taken and transferred to lessees of those properties for the public purpose of reducing concentration of land ownership. Reaffirming the Berman decision's deferential approach to legislative judgments, the court unanimously upheld the statute. The Court concluded that a taking should be upheld as long as it is "rationally related to a conceivable public purpose."

Kelo v. City of New London

In 1990, a state agency designated the City of New London a "distressed municipality." The City was not, however, designated as a blighted or slum area. Thereafter, state and local officials targeted the area for economic revitalization, and a development plan was drafted. In addition to creating a large number of jobs and increasing the City's tax base, the plan was designed to make the City more attractive and to create leisure and recreational opportunities. While most of the property owners in the development area negotiated the sale of their property, negotiations with 7 property owners were unsuccessful. The property owners who did not wish to negotiate challenged the taking arguing that the use of eminent domain was unconstitutional because economic development without a determination of blight is not a valid public purpose.

In a 4-3 decision, the Supreme Court of Connecticut ruled that the takings were authorized by Connecticut's municipal development statute, which declares that the taking of land as part of an economic development project is a "public use" and in the "public interest". The case was appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court. The specific question before the Court was whether the City's taking of non-blighted private property for the purpose of economic development, in compliance with a state statute, satisfied the "public use" requirement of the U.S. Constitution even though the property would be transferred to other private entities for seemingly private uses.

The Court concluded that because the City's development plan "unquestionably" serves a public purpose, the takings satisfy the public use requirement of the U.S. Constitution. The Court immediately acknowledged, however, that a governmental entity may not take the private property of party A for the sole purpose of transferring the property to another private party B, even though A is paid just compensation. The court also noted that a one-to-one transfer of private property for the purpose of putting the property to more productive use, executed outside the confines of an integrated development plan, was not at issue in this case. The court concluded that, while such an unusual exercise of government power "would certainly raise a suspicion that a private purpose was afoot" the issue was not presented in the Kelo case and would not be addressed by the Court until directly presented in a future case.

The Court explicitly stated that the City could not take property simply to confer a private benefit to a "particular" private party. The Court also acknowledged that a governmental entity may not take property under the mere "pretext" of a public purpose, when its actual purpose was to bestow a private benefit. In Kelo, the Court noted that the takings would be executed pursuant to a "carefully considered" development plan; therefore, the property was not being taken under a mere pretext of public purpose.

Unlike more traditional public use takings, i.e., roads, schools, public parks, the Court recognized that the private lessees of the condemned property in New London would not be required to make the property or their services available to all comers. However, the Court noted that over the last hundred years, it has repeatedly rejected a literal requirement that condemned property be put into use for the general public and embraced the broader and more natural interpretation of public use as public purpose. The Court explained the erosion of "use by the public" as the definition of "public use" by pointing to the difficulty in administering the test and the impracticality of the test "given the diverse and always evolving needs of society."

The Court noted that, without exception, its decisions have "defined [the concept of public purpose] broadly, reflecting our longstanding policy of deference to legislative judgments in this field." The Court pointed out that its earliest cases in particular embodied a strong theme of federalism, emphasizing the "great respect" the Court "owe[s] state legislatures and state courts in discerning local public needs." For more than a century, the Court said, its public use jurisprudence has "wisely eschewed" rigid formulas and intrusive scrutiny in favor of affording legislatures broad latitude in determining what public needs justify the use of the takings power.

Moreover, citing the Berman redevelopment case, the Court reasoned that promoting economic development is a traditional function of government and that "[t]here is... no principled way of distinguishing economic development from the other public purposes that we have recognized."

The Court also noted that a determination by municipal officials, acting pursuant to state authorization, that city-planned economic redevelopment is necessary "is entitled to [the Court's] deference." The city had, the Court recognized, carefully formulated a development plan that it believes will provide appreciable benefits to the community, including, but not limited to, new jobs and increased tax revenue.

As with many eminent domain cases, the holding of the Kelo case is not absolutely clear. However, the Court explicitly concluded that the City's plan unquestionably serves a public purpose and that taking private property under the facts presented in the case is permissible under the public use requirement of the U.S. Constitution.

It should be emphasized that the Kelo decision does not in any way restrict the State of Florida from prohibiting takings for purposes similar to those in Kelo, or for any other purpose for that matter. The Court emphasized that “nothing in our opinion precludes any State from placing further restrictions on its exercise of the takings power. Indeed, many States already impose ‘public use’ requirements that are stricter than the federal baseline.” Every state is entitled to interpret the public purpose provisions of its own state constitution in a manner that more narrowly interprets the public purpose requirement. In short, Florida may prohibit takings that are allowed under the U.S. Constitution, but may not allow takings that are prohibited.

Florida Eminent Domain Law

The Florida Constitution addresses eminent domain in section 6, Article X, as follows:

- (a) No private property shall be taken except for a public purpose and with full compensation therefor paid to each owner or secured by deposit in the registry of the court and available to the owner.
- (b) Provision may be made by law for the taking of easements, by like proceedings, for the drainage of the land of one person over or through the land of another.

The Florida Constitution prohibits takings of private property unless the taking is for a “public purpose” and the property owner is paid “full compensation.” The Florida Supreme Court recognized long ago that the taking of private property is one of the most harsh proceedings known to the law, that “private ownership and possession of property was one of the great rights preserved in our constitution and for which our forefathers fought and died; it must be jealously preserved within the reasonable limits prescribed by law.”⁵

Generally speaking, in order for a taking to be valid in Florida, the condemning authority must:

1. Possess authority to exercise the power of eminent domain;
2. Demonstrate that a taking of private property is pursued for a valid public purpose and that all statutory requirements have been fulfilled;
3. Offer evidence showing that the taking is reasonably, not absolutely, necessary to accomplish the public purpose of the taking; and
4. Pay the property owner full compensation as determined by a 12-member jury.

Each of these four requirements is more fully discussed below.

1. The condemning authority must be authorized to exercise the power of eminent domain.

In order to take private property by eminent domain, an entity must possess statutory or constitutional authority to exercise the power of eminent domain. With the exception of cities and possibly charter counties, an entity does not have authority to exercise the power of eminent domain unless authorized to do so by the Legislature. If the Legislature delegates authority to exercise the power of eminent domain, procedures and requirements imposed by statute are mandatory.

a. Constitutional Delegation of Home Rule Powers to Cities and Counties

The municipal home rule provision in Florida's Constitution authorizes cities to "exercise any power for municipal purposes except as otherwise provided by law".⁶ In 1992, the Florida Supreme Court concluded that a statutory grant of authority is not necessary in order for a city to exercise the power of eminent domain.⁷ However, because cities have all powers "except as otherwise provided by law", the Legislature may expressly prohibit cities from exercising the power of eminent domain for particular purposes. Rather than prohibiting municipal exercise of the power of eminent domain, the Legislature has granted municipalities broad statutory powers of eminent domain, including the power to take private property for "good reason connected in anywise with the public welfare of the interests of the municipality and the people thereof" and for "municipal purposes".⁸

The Florida Constitution grants charter counties "all powers of local self government not inconsistent with general law" and grants noncharter counties "such power of self-government as is provided by general law."⁹ Based upon the broad constitutional grant of authority, it appears that charter counties possess the power of eminent domain except as expressly prohibited by general law. However, the Florida Supreme Court has stated, in what appears to be dicta, that counties may not have the power of eminent domain unless specifically authorized by the Legislature.¹⁰ Even if charter counties do not possess constitutional home rule power to take property, the Legislature has granted broad statutory powers to all counties, including the power to take property for "any county purpose".¹¹

It should be noted there is no evidence indicating that a city or county in Florida has exercised the power of eminent domain under constitutional home rule powers for the declared purpose of economic development.

2. A condemning authority must demonstrate that a taking is pursued for a valid public purpose and that any statutory requirements have been fulfilled.
 - a. What is a valid public purpose for which property may be taken by eminent domain under Florida law?

The second requirement for a valid taking is that the property must be taken for a public purpose. The fundamental question is this: what qualifies as a public purpose in Florida? There is not a definitive answer to the question for at least three reasons. First, the determination of whether a taking serves a valid public purpose depends upon the facts of each case. Second, the concept of public purpose has evolved in Florida case law over the past century from a narrowly defined and applied concept to broadly defined and applied concept. Third, the Florida Supreme Court has equated the public purpose necessary to support the issuance of public bonds with the public purpose necessary to support a taking of private property by eminent domain. However, as with eminent domain cases, recent bond validation cases appear to apply a broad interpretation of the public purpose doctrine while early cases apply a more narrow interpretation of the doctrine.

The Florida Courts have long held that the public purpose requirement in the Florida Constitution does not require private property taken by eminent domain to be "used by the public" if the court determines that the taking accomplishes a valid public purpose. However, Florida law does not allow government to take property from private owner A and transfer it to private owner B for "the sole purpose of making such property available to private enterprises for private use."¹²

In order to demonstrate that public purpose is not a clearly defined concept, the following Florida Supreme Court decisions illustrate the fact that some decisions apply the public purpose concept narrowly, while other cases apply the concept broadly.

The first case illustrating the narrow view is the 1947 case of Peavy-Wilson Lumber Co. v. Brevard County.¹³ In the Peavy case, the Court concluded that the power of eminent domain should be limited to taking property for “something basically essential” such as roads, schools, drainage projects, parks, and playgrounds. However, even the Peavy Court recognized that the concept is not static and advances with caution to meet society’s needs in conformity with the constitution.

In 1975, the court considered the case of *Baycol v. Downtown Development Authority of City of Ft. Lauderdale*¹⁴, in which a downtown development authority attempted to condemn private property for a parking garage. The Supreme Court concluded that there was not a public need for extra parking facilities, which was cited as the sole basis for the taking, without the shopping center that would be constructed atop the parking garage. The development authority did not assert that economic development -- job creation or tax base enhancement -- was the public purpose for condemning the property. Therefore, the Baycol court did not explicitly rule on whether a taking for the declared public purpose of economic development is permissible under the Florida Constitution. The Baycol court declared, however, that private property may not be taken by eminent domain for a predominantly private use. To date, the Court has not established a “test” for determining when a public purpose predominates over the private interest. Each case is viewed on the individual facts presented to the court and based upon the public purpose asserted by the condemning authority. Therefore, it is unknown whether the Florida courts would consider a Kelo-type taking as serving a predominately public or private use.

In 1977, the court considered the case of Deseret Ranches of Florida v. Bowman,¹⁵ and upheld a state statute that permitted one private property owner to exercise the power of eminent domain for the purpose of obtaining an easement of necessity over the property of another private landowner. The court reasoned that the “the statute’s purpose is predominantly public and the benefit to the landowner is incidental to the public purpose....Useful land becomes more scarce in proportion to the population increase, and the problem in this state becomes greater as tourism, commerce and the need for housing and agricultural goods grow. By its application to shut-off lands to be used for housing, agriculture, timber production and stock raising, the statute is designed to fill these needs. There is then a clear public purpose in providing means of access to such lands so that they may be utilized in the enumerated ways.” It has been asserted that the court’s decision in Deseret “utterly complicates what some thought might have otherwise been a straightforward argument that Baycol prohibits Kelo-style economic development takings. In Deseret Ranches, it was clear that all the direct benefits of the taking were private, and any public benefits were purely incidental. Yet the ‘sensible utilization of land’ was, for the Court, of such a dominant public purpose as to allow that rather lopsided outcome to be characterized as consistent with Baycol. One does not have to possess much imagination to think of how economic development takings could be portrayed as also serving the predominant public purpose of ‘sensible utilization of land.’”¹⁶

In 1988, the court continued to broaden the application of the public purpose doctrine in Fl. Dep’t of Transp. v. Fortune Federal Savings and Loan Ass’n,¹⁷ concluding that “[t]he term ‘public purpose’ does not mean simply that the land is used for a specific public function, i.e. a road or other right of way. Rather, the concept of public purpose must be read more broadly to include projects which benefit the state in a tangible, foreseeable way.”

There is also a large body of case law addressing the “public purpose” necessary to support the issuance of public bonds or the spending of public funds. When the Florida Supreme Court upheld the Community

Redevelopment Act in 1980¹⁸, it equated the public purpose necessary to support the issuance of public bonds with the public purpose necessary to support a taking of private property by eminent domain. At least since 1968, the Court has broadly applied the public purpose concept in bond validation cases. However, there are early bond validation cases that appear to apply a narrow view of the public purpose doctrine.

b. Determinations of public purpose

The Legislature may authorize an entity to take property and, at the same time, declare that the taking serves a particular public purpose. However, the ultimate question of the validity of a legislatively declared public purpose is resolved by the courts.¹⁹ Nonetheless, the courts' role in determining whether the power of eminent domain is exercised in furtherance of a legislatively declared public purpose is narrow.²⁰ In order to invalidate a statute that has a stated public purpose, the party challenging the statute must show that the stated purpose is arbitrary and capricious and so clearly erroneous as to be beyond the power of the legislature.²¹ The threshold question for the courts is not whether the proposed use is a public one, but whether the Legislature might reasonably consider it a public one.²²

While the question of whether the use for which private property is taken is a public use is ultimately a judicial question, where the Legislature declares a particular use to be a public use, the presumption is in favor of its declaration, and the courts will not interfere unless the use is clearly and manifestly of a private character.²³

Similarly, when a local government's governing body determines that a taking of private property serves a statutory public purpose, the determination is entitled to judicial deference and is presumed valid and correct unless patently erroneous. Unless a condemning authority acts illegally, in bad faith, or abuses its discretion, its selection of land for condemnation will not be overruled by a court; a court is not authorized to substitute its judgment for that of a governmental body acting within the scope of its lawful authority.²⁴ The court will sustain the local government's determination that a taking serves the statutory public purpose as long as it is "fairly debatable".²⁵

3. A condemning authority must offer evidence showing that the taking is reasonably, not absolutely, necessary to accomplish the public purpose of the taking.

If a governmental entity is authorized to take property for a valid public purpose, the entity must show that taking the property is reasonably, not absolutely, necessary in order to accomplish the declared public purpose. First, the condemning authority must show some evidence of a reasonable necessity for the taking. Once a reasonable necessity is shown, the exercise of the condemning authority's discretion will not be disturbed in the absence of illegality, bad faith, or gross abuse of discretion.²⁶

4. A condemning authority must pay the property owner full compensation as determined by a 12-member jury.

If a court finds that a governmental entity is authorized to take private property for a valid public purpose, and that the entity has presented evidence showing that the property is reasonably necessary to accomplish the declared public purpose, the property owner must be paid full compensation for the taken property. Key aspects of the constitutional requirement for payment of full compensation may be summarized as follows:

- A property owner is entitled to full and just compensation.
- A twelve-member jury determines the amount of compensation.
- Determining the amount of just compensation is a judicial function that cannot be performed by the Legislature directly or indirectly.
- The Legislature may create an obligation to pay more than what the courts might consider full compensation.
- Generally, the just and full compensation due is the fair market value of the property at the time of the taking.
- A condemning authority must pay reasonable attorney's fees and costs.
- A landowner is entitled to compensation for the reasonable cost of moving personal property, including impact fees.
- Business damages are available only in the case of partial takings, not takings of a full parcel.

Impact of the Kelo Decision on Florida Law

The question of whether the Kelo decision impacts takings in Florida continues to be the subject of debate. Arguably, the Kelo decision has no direct impact on Florida's eminent domain law. Although the decision applies in Florida to the extent that a Kelo-type taking may not violate the U.S. Constitution, the decision does not mean that a Kelo-type taking is allowed under the Florida Constitution. Whether the Florida Constitution allows a Kelo-type taking must be decided by the Florida Supreme Court, not the U.S. Supreme Court. What remains uncertain is whether the Kelo decision will have an indirect impact on the Florida courts' interpretation and application of eminent domain law in any future attempts by cities or counties to take private property for economic development purposes.

Determining whether a Kelo-type taking may occur in Florida must be considered in two contexts:

1. First, whether a city or county taking of private property in a non-blighted or non-slum area for the purpose of economic development is permitted outside the context of Florida's Community Redevelopment Act; and
2. Second, whether Kelo-type takings are now occurring under the Community Redevelopment Act.

Kelo-type takings outside the Community Redevelopment Act context

Unlike Connecticut, the Florida Legislature has not enacted a statute that expressly authorizes takings of private property in non-blighted or non-slum areas for the purpose of economic development. Therefore, state agencies are prohibited from taking property for economic development purposes. Based on the absence of a statutory delegation of authority, it may appear that a Kelo-type taking cannot occur under any circumstances. As previously discussed, however, cities and charter counties may have constitutional home rule power to take property by eminent domain for economic development purposes without an explicit authorization from the Legislature. In addition, current statutes grant broad home rule authority to cities and counties, including the authority to exercise the power of eminent domain for any municipal or county purpose, and declare that economic development is a public purpose for which cities and counties may expend public funds. It could be argued that, since the Legislature has declared economic development a public purpose for spending public funds²⁷, economic development may be considered a public purpose for which cities and counties may exercise the power of eminent domain.

Based upon the uncertainty created by the current case law and the lack of case law directly on point, it is not possible to determine how the Florida courts will view takings of private property for economic development purposes in Florida if directly presented with the issue. What is certain is that there is not an explicit statutory or constitutional provision that prohibits cities or counties from taking private property in non-blighted or non-slum areas for purposes of increasing jobs, increasing the tax base, maximizing efficient use of property, or other general economic development purposes. Further, the Florida Supreme Court has never considered a case involving a taking of private property in non-blighted or non-slum areas by a city or county asserting home rule powers for the declared public purpose of economic development.

Therefore, the decision as to whether Kelo-type takings are permissible in Florida lies squarely in the judiciary, and will remain so unless the constitution or statutes are amended to restrict takings for economic development purposes or restrict transfers of taken property to private entities.

Takings in the context of the Community Redevelopment Act

After the Kelo decision was issued, the media and other interested parties focused primarily on Florida's Community Redevelopment Act (Act), alleging that abuses of the Act are occurring throughout Florida. However, the Kelo decision does not have a direct impact on takings in the redevelopment context due to the fact that the property at issue in Kelo was not blighted or taken under a "redevelopment" statute.

In 1980, the Florida Supreme Court upheld Florida's Community Redevelopment Act in its entirety. The Act authorizes the use of eminent domain for acquisition and clearance of private property for the public purpose of eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions in a geographic area. The Act also authorizes "substantial private and commercial uses of the property after redevelopment."²⁸

The Act imposes requirements that must be satisfied by a county or city that wishes to create a redevelopment agency, declare redevelopment areas, or issue revenue bonds to finance projects within these areas. Under the Act, a county or city may not exercise community redevelopment authority, including the power of eminent domain, until the county or city satisfies the statutory requirements. Those requirements include adoption of a resolution, supported by data and analysis, which makes a legislative finding that the conditions in the area meet the criteria of a "slum area" or "blighted area" as defined in statute,²⁹ and that the rehabilitation, conservation, or redevelopment of the area is necessary in the interest of the public health, safety, morals, or welfare of the residents of the county or city.³⁰

The Community Redevelopment Act does not specifically authorize takings for "economic development" purposes; rather, the Act authorizes the taking of property within a blighted or slum area for the public purpose of eliminating and preventing slum and blight conditions, and permits the transfer of taken property to private entities for redevelopment in order to accomplish that public purpose. Private property rights advocates assert that the Act is being used to take areas of property that are not genuinely blighted for purely economic development purposes. Much of the concern expressed by property rights advocates centers around the application of the statutory definition of "blighted area," and what many perceive as the vague and inappropriate criteria in the definition.

Soon after the Kelo decision was issued, an Order of Taking was entered by the Circuit Court in Volusia County in a case involving takings of private property on the Daytona Beach Boardwalk, which is located within a community redevelopment area. The Order of Taking cites extensively to the Kelo decision, as well as to Florida judicial decisions, to uphold the takings in the case. Citing the Kelo decision, the circuit court opined that "[w]hen a taking serves a public purpose, the fact that the property ultimately is transferred to a private owner and that it confers a private benefits on others does not render the taking unconstitutional. The public use clause would be violated only if the taking were for purely private purposes or if the alleged public purpose were merely pretextual."³¹

Community Redevelopment Act issues addressed in case law

A large body of case law exists regarding the exercise of eminent domain under the Community Redevelopment Act, which includes the following significant judicial conclusions:

- A community redevelopment agency is not required to prove that the same level of blight exists when it seeks to condemn property as was present when the redevelopment plan was initially adopted.³²
- Designations of blight or slum do not expire after a given period of time; therefore, property located within a redevelopment area is subject to taking for an indefinite period of time.³³
- If a public purpose and reasonable necessity exists for the taking of property for slum or blight clearance, the fact that a landowner has begun to develop the property in accordance with the redevelopment plan does not give the owner an option to retain and develop the property unless approved by the redevelopment agency.³⁴
- The general characteristics of a slum or blighted geographic area control whether property within the entire area is subject to taking, not the condition of an individual parcel.³⁵ Therefore, a parcel of property may be subject to taking by eminent domain if the parcel is located in an area designated as slum or blighted even if the parcel itself is not in a slum or blighted condition.

Summary of Key Points

The following may be considered a summary of the key aspects of the preceding discussion of the law:

- The decision as to whether a taking for economic development purposes is permissible in Florida lies squarely in the judiciary, and will remain so unless the constitution or statutes are amended to restrict such takings.
- The Kelo decision did not directly affect the fundamental principles of Florida's eminent domain law; however, for the first time, the U.S. Supreme Court approved, under the U.S. Constitution, a taking of private property in a non-blighted or non-slum area and subsequent transfer to private parties for the purpose of economic development.
- Whether the Kelo decision will have an indirect impact on the Florida courts' interpretation and application of the law in a future attempt by cities or counties to take private property for economic development purposes is unknown.
- There is not a Florida statute that explicitly prohibits the taking of private property for economic development purposes; therefore, cities and counties appear to have the underlying authority to initiate a taking for economic development purposes under their constitutional and statutory home rule power.
- The Florida Supreme Court has not considered a case involving a taking for the declared public purpose of economic development. Therefore, whether the Court will uphold or prohibit such takings in the future is unknown.
- The Florida Supreme Court has upheld the Community Redevelopment Act, concluding that the elimination and prevention of slum and blight serves a public purpose and that the public purpose is not invalidated by the substantial involvement of private interests in redevelopment.
- The Community Redevelopment Act includes a broad definition of "blighted area," which may permit the taking of an individual parcel of property that does not appear to be blighted. Private property rights advocates claim that under the current definition of "blight," Kelo-type takings are occurring in Florida.

- The League of Cities and the Community Redevelopment Association assert that eminent domain is typically a last resort to complete the land assembly process. However, they predict that, without the power of eminent domain, “CRAs will have much difficulty in assembling land especially where many landowners are involved”.

Community Redevelopment Act Generally

The Community Redevelopment Act of 1969, Ch. 163, Part II, F.S. (Act), provides a mechanism to eliminate and prevent the recurrence of slum or blighted areas, “which constitute a serious and growing menace, injurious to the public health, safety, morals, and welfare of the residents of the state.” The Act finds and declares that the powers conferred by the Act, including the power of eminent domain, are for public uses and purposes for which public money may be expended and the power of eminent domain exercised. In short, the Act declares that eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions is a valid public purpose for which property may be taken by eminent domain.

The Act authorizes counties and cities to exercise the community redevelopment powers under the Act if the governing body first adopts a “finding of necessity” resolution finding that conditions in the area meet the criteria for a “slum area” or “blighted area” under the Act. The definition has undergone revisions over the years whereby the criteria were made more general in order to allow non-traditional “slum” and “blighted” areas to be eligible for participation. Section 163.340, F.S., defines “slum area” and “blighted area” as follows:

- (7) "Slum area" means an area having physical or economic conditions conducive to disease, infant mortality, juvenile delinquency, poverty, or crime because there is a predominance of buildings or improvements, whether residential or nonresidential, which are impaired by reason of dilapidation, deterioration, age, or obsolescence, and exhibiting one or more of the following factors:
- (a) Inadequate provision for ventilation, light, air, sanitation, or open spaces;
 - (b) High density of population, compared to the population density of adjacent areas within the county or municipality; and overcrowding, as indicated by government-maintained statistics or other studies and the requirements of the Florida Building Code; or
 - (c) The existence of conditions that endanger life or property by fire or other causes.

- (8) "Blighted area" means an area in which there are a substantial number of deteriorated, or deteriorating structures, in which conditions, as indicated by government-maintained statistics or other studies, are leading to economic distress or endanger life or property, and in which two or more of the following factors are present:
- (a) Predominance of defective or inadequate street layout, parking facilities, roadways, bridges, or public transportation facilities;
 - (b) Aggregate assessed values of real property in the area for ad valorem tax purposes have failed to show any appreciable increase over the 5 years prior to the finding of such conditions;
 - (c) Faulty lot layout in relation to size, adequacy, accessibility, or usefulness;
 - (d) Unsanitary or unsafe conditions;
 - (e) Deterioration of site or other improvements;
 - (f) Inadequate and outdated building density patterns;
 - (g) Falling lease rates per square foot of office, commercial, or industrial space compared to the remainder of the county or municipality;
 - (h) Tax or special assessment delinquency exceeding the fair value of the land;
 - (i) Residential and commercial vacancy rates higher in the area than in the remainder of the county or municipality;
 - (j) Incidence of crime in the area higher than in the remainder of the county or municipality;
 - (k) Fire and emergency medical service calls to the area proportionately higher than in the remainder of the county or municipality;
 - (l) A greater number of violations of the Florida Building Code in the area than the number of violations recorded in the remainder of the county or municipality;
 - (m) Diversity of ownership or defective or unusual conditions of title which prevent the free alienability of land within the deteriorated or hazardous area; or
 - (n) Governmentally owned property with adverse environmental conditions caused by a public or private entity.

However, the term "blighted area" also means any area in which at least one of the factors identified in paragraphs (a) through (n) are present and all taxing authorities subject to s. 163.387(2)(a) agree, either by interlocal agreement or agreements with the agency or by resolution, that the area is blighted. Such agreement or resolution shall only determine that the area is blighted. For purposes of qualifying for the tax credits authorized in chapter 220, "blighted area" means an area as defined in this subsection.

Upon a further finding that there is a need for a community redevelopment agency to carry out the community redevelopment purposes of the Act, the governing body may create a community redevelopment agency. The finding of necessity resolution is not required to specify that property within the redevelopment area may be subject to taking by eminent domain, and the governing body is not required to provide notice of the resolution to property owners within the area other than the notice typically provided for public hearings conducted by a governmental entity. The notice of the public hearing is not required to specify that property within the redevelopment area may be subject to taking. After the finding of necessity resolution is adopted and the community redevelopment agency is formed, property within the area is subject to taking if taking the property is reasonably necessary to accomplish the public purpose of eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions in the area.

Section 163.375, F.S., currently authorizes any county or municipality, or any community redevelopment agency pursuant to specific approval of the governing body of the county or municipality that established the agency, to acquire by eminent domain any interest in real property, including a fee simple title, that it deems necessary for, or in connection with, community redevelopment and related activities under the Act. Any county or municipality, or any community redevelopment agency pursuant to specific approval by the governing body of the county or municipality that established the agency, may exercise the power of eminent domain in the manner provided in chs. 73 and 74, F.S., or may exercise the power of eminent domain in the manner provided by any other statutory provision for the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Property in unincorporated enclaves surrounded by the boundaries of a community redevelopment area may be acquired when it is determined necessary by the agency to accomplish the community redevelopment plan. Property already devoted to a public use may be acquired in like manner. However, no real property belonging to the United States, the state, or any political subdivision of the state may be acquired without its consent.

If a governing body adopts a finding of necessity resolution and creates a redevelopment agency, any property within the redevelopment area may be subject to taking if taking the property is reasonably necessary to accomplish the public purpose of eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions. If, at some point after the resolution is adopted, a property owner challenges the taking of a specific parcel of private property and questions the validity of the resolution finding blight or slum conditions, the courts will sustain the resolution and findings of the governing body "as long as [they were] fairly debatable" at the time the resolution was adopted.³⁶

When a local government determines that a taking of private property serves the statutory public purpose of eliminating slum or blight conditions, the determination is entitled to judicial deference and is presumed valid and correct unless patently erroneous. Unless a condemning authority acts illegally, in bad faith, or abuses its discretion, its selection of land for condemnation will not be overruled by a court, and a court is not authorized to substitute its judgment for that of a governmental body acting within the scope of its lawful authority.³⁷ The court will sustain the local government's determination that a taking serves the declared public purpose as long as it is "fairly debatable".³⁸

If a governmental entity is authorized to take property for a valid public purpose, the entity must show that a taking of the property is reasonably, not absolutely, necessary in order to accomplish the declared public purpose of eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions. First, the condemning authority must show some evidence of a reasonable necessity for the taking. Once a reasonable necessity is shown, the exercise of the condemning authority's discretion will not be disturbed in the absence of illegality, bad faith, or gross abuse of discretion.³⁹

Within community redevelopment areas, charter counties and cities may also exercise the power of eminent domain pursuant to their home rule powers or any other statutory authorization, including the power to take property for any county or municipal purpose. Non-charter counties may take property within the boundaries of a community redevelopment area for any purpose authorized by statute, including any county purpose.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES

Section-by-Section Analysis

Section 1. Creates s. 73.013, F.S.

This section creates new s. 73.013, F.S., to restrict transfers of property taken by eminent domain to private parties. This section is created to address takings for economic development purposes by prohibiting transfers of property taken by eminent domain to private parties unless the transfer qualifies as one of the exceptions listed in this section.

According to this new section, if the state, any political subdivision as defined by statute, or any other entity to which the power of eminent domain is delegated files a petition of taking on or after July 1, 2006, regarding a parcel of real property, ownership or control of property acquired pursuant to the petition may not be conveyed by the condemning authority or any other entity to a natural person or private entity, except that ownership or control of property acquired pursuant to the petition may be conveyed to:

- (1) (a) A natural person or private entity for use in providing common carrier services or systems;
 - (b) A natural person or private entity for use as a road or other right-of-way or means open to the public for transportation, whether at no charge or by toll;
 - (c) A natural person or private entity that is a public or private utility for use in providing electricity services or systems, natural or manufactured gas services or systems, water and wastewater services or systems, stormwater or runoff services or systems, sewer services or systems, pipeline facilities, telephone services or systems, or similar services or systems;
 - (d) A natural person or private entity for use in providing public infrastructure;
 - (e) A natural person or private entity that occupies, pursuant to a lease, an incidental part of a public property or a public facility for the purpose of providing goods or services to the public;
 - (f) A natural person or private entity, after public notice and competitive bidding unless otherwise required by general law, if the property was owned and controlled by the condemning authority or a governmental entity for at least 5 years after the condemning authority acquired title to the property; or
 - (g) A natural person or private entity in accordance with subsection (2).
- (2) If ownership of property is conveyed to a natural person or private entity pursuant to paragraph (1)(a), (b), (c), (d), and (e), and that natural person or private entity retains ownership and control of the property for at least 5 years after acquiring title, the property may subsequently be transferred, after public notice and competitive bidding, to another natural person or private entity without restriction.

1. Common Carriers

New s. 73.013(1)(a), F.S., allows transfers of taken property to a natural person or private entity for use in providing common carrier services or systems. A common carrier is generally defined as “one who holds himself out to the public as engaged in the business of transporting persons or property from place to place, for compensation, offering his services to the public generally....The distinctive characteristic of a common carrier is that he undertakes to carry for all people indifferently and hence he is regarded, in some respects, as a public servant. The dominant and controlling factor in determining the status of one as a common carrier is his public profession or holding out, by words or by a course of conduct, as to the service offered or performed.... To constitute a public conveyance a common carrier, it is not necessary that it come within the definition of a public utility so as to be subjected to the rules and regulations of a public utility commission.”⁴⁰

2. Public Infrastructure

New s. 73.013(1)(d), F.S., allows the transfer of taken property to a private person or entity if the property will be used for purposes of public infrastructure. Although the new statutory section does not define “public infrastructure”, the term is defined in The American Heritage Dictionary as “[t]he basic facilities, services, and installations needed for the functioning of a community or society, such as transportation and communications systems, water and power lines, and public institutions including schools, post offices, and prisons.”⁴¹

Infrastructure has come to connote a diverse collection of constructed facilities and associated services, ranging from airports to energy supply to landfills to wastewater treatment. Many of the facilities are built and operated by governments, and thus fall easily into the category of public works, but others are built or operated, in whole or in part, by private enterprise or joint public-private partnership. What is today considered infrastructure has traditionally been viewed as separate systems of constructed facilities, supporting such functions as supplying water, enabling travel, and controlling floods.⁴²

A 1987 committee of the National Research Council, reporting on Infrastructure for the 21st Century adopted the term “public works infrastructure” including both specific functional modes—highways, streets, roads, and bridges; mass transit; airports and airways; water supply and water resources; wastewater management; solidwaste treatment and disposal; electric power generation and transmission; telecommunications; and hazardous waste management—and the combined system these modal elements comprise. Parkland, open space, urban forests, drainage channels and aquifers, and other hydrologic features also qualify as infrastructure, not only for their aesthetic and recreational value, but because they play important roles in supplying clean air and water.⁴³

Section 2. Amends s. 163.335, F.S.

Currently, s. 163.335, F.S., provides legislative findings and declarations of necessity in the Community Redevelopment Act. This section finds and declares that the powers conferred by the Act, including the power of eminent domain, are for public uses and purposes for which public money may be expended and the power of eminent domain exercised. In short, this provision declares that eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions is a valid public purpose for which private property may be taken by eminent domain. In 1980, the Florida Supreme Court stated that “it was recognized very early that slum clearance and public housing, when declared to be so by the legislature, were public purposes...The wisdom of authorizing the cataclysmic demolition and redesign of neighborhoods or even whole districts is not for the Court to determine.”⁴⁴ The courts have concluded that eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions is a valid public purpose for taking any property within a community redevelopment area even if the property is in immaculate condition and the taking occurs long after the local government determines that slum or blight conditions exist in the area.⁴⁵

The bill amends s. 163.335, F.S., to specify that the prevention or elimination of a "slum area" or "blighted area" as defined in the Act, and the preservation or enhancement of the tax base, are not public uses or purposes for which private property may be taken by eminent domain.

Section 3. Amends s. 163.355, F.S.

Currently, s. 163.355, F.S., requires a city or county to adopt a finding of necessity resolution that makes a legislative finding that the conditions in the area meet the criteria described in the statutory definitions of "slum area" and "blighted area". The resolution must state that (a) one or more slum or blighted areas, or one or more areas in which there is a shortage of housing affordable to residents of low or moderate income, including the elderly, exist in such county or municipality; and (b) the rehabilitation, conservation, or redevelopment, or a combination thereof, of such area or areas, including, if appropriate, the development of housing which residents of low or moderate income, including the elderly, can afford, is necessary in the interest of the public health, safety, morals, or welfare of the residents of such county or municipality.

The bill adds new provisions to s. 163.355, F.S., all of which generally relate to providing enhanced notice prior to formation of a community redevelopment area to owners of property that may be located within the community redevelopment area. The enhanced notice is designed to inform the public that property located within a proposed redevelopment area may be subject to taking by eminent domain if the area is designated as a redevelopment area under the Act.

New subsection (2) requires each resolution finding slum or blight conditions to indicate that property within the community redevelopment area may be subject to taking by eminent domain pursuant to s. 163.375, F.S. In the alternative, the county or municipality may explicitly state in the resolution that the power of eminent domain provided under s. 163.375, F.S., will not be exercised by the county or municipality within the community redevelopment area. A county or municipality is not required to provide notice in accordance with subsections (3) and (4) if the resolution finding slum or blight conditions, as proposed and adopted by the county or municipality, expressly declares that the power of eminent domain provided under s. 163.375, F.S. will not be exercised by the county or municipality within the community redevelopment area.

New subsection (3) provides that, at least 30 days prior to the first public hearing at which a proposed resolution finding slum or blight conditions will be considered by a county or municipality, actual notice of the public hearing must be mailed via first class mail to each real property owner whose property may be included within the community redevelopment area and to each business owner, including a lessee, who operates a business located on property that may be included within the community redevelopment area.

a. Notice to Property Owners. Notice must be sent to each owner of real property that may be included within the community redevelopment area at the owner's last known address as listed on the county ad valorem tax roll. Alternatively, the notice may be personally delivered to a property owner. If there is more than one owner of a property, notice to one owner constitutes notice to all owners of the property. The return of the notice as undeliverable by the postal authorities constitutes compliance with this subsection. The condemning authority is not required to give notice to a person who acquires title to property after the notice required by this subsection has been given.

b. Notice to Business Owners. Notice must be sent to the address of the registered agent for the business located on the property or, if no agent is registered, by certified mail or personal delivery to the address of the business located on the property. Notice to one owner of a multiple ownership business constitutes notice to all owners of that business. The return of the notice as undeliverable by the postal authorities constitutes compliance with this subsection. The condemning authority is not required to give notice to a person who acquires an interest in a business after the notice required by this subsection has been given.

c. At a minimum, the mailed notice required by paragraphs (a) and (b) must:

- Generally explain the purpose, effect, and substance of the proposed resolution;
- Indicate that private property within the proposed redevelopment area may be subject to taking by eminent domain if the current condition of the property poses an existing threat to the public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain;
- Indicate that private-to-private transfers of property may occur;
- Contain a geographic location map that clearly indicates the area covered by the resolution, including major street names as a means of identification of the general area;
- Provide the dates, times, and locations of future public hearings during which the resolution may be considered;
- Identify the place or places within the county or municipality at which the resolution may be inspected by the public;
- Indicate that the property owner may file written objections with the local governing board prior to any public hearing on the resolution; and
- Indicate that interested parties may appear and be heard at all public hearings at which the resolution will be considered.

New subsection (4) provides that, in addition to mailing notice to property owners, the county or municipality must conduct at least two advertised public hearings prior to adoption of the proposed resolution. At least one hearing must be held after 5 p.m. on a weekday, unless the governing body, by a majority plus one vote, elects to conduct the hearing at another time of day. The first public hearing must be held at least 7 days after the day the first advertisement is published. The second hearing must be held at least 10 days after the first hearing and must be advertised at least 5 days prior to the public hearing. The required advertisements must be no less than 2 columns wide by 10 inches long in a standard size or a tabloid size newspaper, and the headline in the advertisement must be in a type no smaller than 18 point. The advertisement must not be placed in that portion of the newspaper where legal notices and classified advertisements appear and must be placed in a newspaper of general paid circulation rather than one of limited subject matter. Whenever possible, the advertisement must appear in a newspaper that is published at least 5 days a week unless the only newspaper in the community is published fewer than 5 days a week. At a minimum, the advertisement must:

- Generally explain the substance and effect of the resolution;
- Include a statement indicating that private property within the proposed redevelopment area may be subject to taking by eminent domain if the current condition of the property poses an existing threat to the public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain;
- Provide the date, time, and location of the meeting;
- Identify the place or places within the county or municipality at which the resolution may be inspected by the public;
- Contain a geographic location map that clearly indicates the area covered by the resolution, including major street names as a means of identification of the general area;
- Indicate that any interested party may file written objections with the local governing board prior to the public hearing; and
- Indicate that any interested party may appear and be heard at the public hearing.

Section 4. Amends s. 163.358, F.S.

Currently, under s. 163.358, F.S., community redevelopment powers assigned to a community redevelopment agency include all the powers necessary or convenient to carry out and effectuate the purposes and provisions of the Act, except the following, which vest in the governing body of the county or municipality:

- The power to determine an area to be a slum or blighted area, or combination thereof; to designate such area as appropriate for community redevelopment; and to hold any public hearings required with respect thereto.
- The power to grant final approval to community redevelopment plans and modifications thereof.
- The power to authorize the issuance of revenue bonds.
- The power to approve the acquisition, demolition, removal, or disposal of property and the power to assume the responsibility to bear loss.
- The power to approve the development of community policing innovations.

This bill amends s. 163.358, F.S., to specify that the power of eminent domain vests in the governing body of a city or county that has created a community redevelopment agency, and to prohibit delegation of the power of eminent domain by the governing body of a city or county to a community redevelopment agency.

Section 5. Amends s. 163.360, F.S.

Currently, s. 163.360, F.S., provides that community redevelopment in a community redevelopment area may not be planned or initiated unless the governing body has, by resolution, determined such area to be a slum area, a blighted area, or an area in which there is a shortage of housing affordable to residents of low or moderate income, including the elderly, or a combination thereof, and designated such area as appropriate for community redevelopment. The county, municipality, or community redevelopment agency may itself prepare or cause to be prepared a community redevelopment plan, or any person or agency, public or private, may submit such a plan to a community redevelopment agency. Prior to adopting a plan, the governing body must hold a public hearing on a community redevelopment plan after public notice by publication in a newspaper having a general circulation in the area of operation of the county or municipality. The notice must describe the time, date, place, and purpose of the hearing, identify generally the community redevelopment area covered by the plan, and outline the general scope of the community redevelopment plan under consideration.

This bill amends s. 163.360, F.S., to require each community redevelopment plan to indicate that real property within the community redevelopment area may be subject to taking by eminent domain pursuant to s. 163.375, F.S. If consistent with the resolution finding slum or blight conditions, the plan must indicate that the power of eminent domain provided under s. 163.375, F.S., will not be exercised by the county or municipality within the community redevelopment area.

Section 6. Amends s. 163.370, F.S.

Currently, s. 163.370, F.S., specifies that every county and municipality has all the powers necessary or convenient to carry out and effectuate the purposes and provisions of the Act, including a non-exclusive list of powers found in that section. A county or city may exercise all or any part or combination of powers granted under the Act or to elect to have such powers exercised by a community redevelopment agency

This bill amends s. 163.370, F.S., to specify that the power of eminent domain may not be exercised by a community redevelopment agency. The bill also specifies that property may only be acquired by a community redevelopment agency by voluntary methods of acquisition prior to approval of the community redevelopment plan or approval of plan modifications.

Section 7. Amends s. 163.375, F.S.

Section 163.375, F.S., currently authorizes any county or municipality, or any community redevelopment agency pursuant to specific approval of the governing body of the county or municipality which established the agency, to acquire by condemnation any interest in real property, including a fee simple title, which it deems necessary for, or in connection with, community redevelopment and related activities under the Act. Any county or municipality, or any community redevelopment agency pursuant to specific approval by the governing body of the county or municipality which established the agency, may exercise the power of eminent domain in the manner provided in chs. 73 and 74, F.S., or it may exercise the power of eminent domain in the manner provided by any other statutory provision for the exercise of the power of eminent domain. Property in unincorporated enclaves surrounded by the boundaries of a community redevelopment area may be acquired when it is determined necessary by the agency to accomplish the community redevelopment plan. Property already devoted to a public use may be acquired in like manner. However, no real property belonging to the United States, the state, or any political subdivision of the state may be acquired without its consent.

If a governing body adopts a finding of necessity resolution and creates a redevelopment agency, any property within the redevelopment area may be subject to taking if taking the property is reasonably necessary to accomplish the public purpose of eliminating and preventing the recurrence of slum or blight conditions in a geographic area. If, at some point after the resolution is adopted, a property owner challenges the taking of a specific parcel of private property and questions the validity of the resolution finding blight or slum conditions, the courts will sustain the resolution and findings of the governing body "as long as [they were] fairly debatable" at the time the resolution was adopted.⁴⁶

This bill substantially amends s. 163.375, F.S., to limit authority to take property by eminent domain under the Act. This bill provides that, after the community redevelopment plan is adopted, a county or municipality may acquire by eminent domain any interest in a parcel of real property within a community redevelopment area, including a fee simple title, for the purpose of eliminating an existing threat to public health or public safety if the parcel of real property is condemnation eligible. A parcel of real property is condemnation eligible only if the current condition of the property poses an existing threat to public health or public safety and the existing threat to public health or public safety is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain as evidenced by at least one of the following factors:

- The property contains a structure which, in its current condition, has substantial dilapidation which is either physically incurable or economically incurable in that the cost of repair or rehabilitation would exceed the replacement cost of a new structure. Superficial or cosmetic disrepair, which is reparable by a nominal expenditure, not to exceed 20% of the market value of the existing structure, is not considered dilapidation for purposes of constituting a condemnation-eligible factor;
- The property contains a structure which, in its current condition, is unsanitary, unsafe, or vermin-infested, and is designated by the agency responsible for enforcement of the housing, building, or fire codes as unfit for human habitation or use;
- The property contains a structure which, in its current condition, is a fire hazard, or otherwise dangerous to the safety of persons or property, and is designated by the agency responsible for enforcement of the housing, building, or fire codes as unfit for human habitation or use;
- The property contains a structure from which, in its current condition, the utilities, plumbing, heating, sewerage, or other facilities have been disconnected, destroyed, removed, or rendered ineffective so that the property is unfit for human habitation or use; or
- The physical condition, use, or occupancy of the property constitutes a public nuisance and the property has been the subject of code violations affecting public health or public safety that have not been substantially rehabilitated within one year of receipt of notice to rehabilitate from the appropriate code enforcement agency.

⁴⁶ Panama City Beach Community Redevelopment Agency v. State, 831 So.2d 662 (Fla. 1992).

A county or municipality must exercise the power of eminent domain in the manner provided in this section and in chs. 73 and 74, F.S., or pursuant to the power of eminent domain provided by any other statutory provision, as limited by new s. 73.013, F.S.

A county or municipality may not initiate an eminent domain proceeding pursuant to authority conferred by this section unless the governing body first adopts a resolution of taking containing specific determinations or findings that:

- The public purpose of the taking is to eliminate an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain;
- The parcel of real property is condemnation eligible, including a specific description of the current conditions on the property that pose an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain; and
- Taking the property by eminent domain is reasonably necessary in order to accomplish the public purpose of eliminating an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain.

The county or municipality may not adopt a resolution of taking under this section unless actual notice of the public hearing at which the resolution is considered was provided, at least 45 days prior to the hearing, to the property owner and to any business owner, including a lessee, who operates a business located on the property.

a. Notice to Property Owners. Notice must be sent by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the last known address listed on the county ad valorem tax roll of each owner of the property. Alternatively, the notice may be personally delivered to each property owner. Notice must also be posted on the property subject to taking under the resolution. The condemning authority is not required to give notice to a person who acquires title to the property after the notice required by this subsection has been given.

b. Notice to Business Owners. Notice must be sent by certified mail, return receipt requested, to the address of the registered agent for the business located on the property to be acquired or, if no agent is registered, by certified mail or personal delivery to the address of the business located on the property to be acquired. Notice to one owner of a multiple ownership business constitutes notice to all business owners of that business. Notice must also be posted on the property subject to taking under the resolution. The condemning authority is not required to give notice to a person who acquires an interest in the business after the notice required by this subsection has been given.

At a minimum, the notices to property and business owners required above must indicate:

- That the county or municipal governing body will determine whether to take the parcel of real property pursuant to authority granted by this part and will formally consider a resolution of taking at a public hearing;
- That the property is subject to taking by eminent domain under this part because current conditions on the property pose an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain;
- The specific conditions on the property that pose an existing threat to public health or public safety and form the basis for taking the property;
- That the property will not be subject to taking if the specific conditions that pose an existing threat to public health or public safety and form the basis for the taking are removed prior to the public hearing at which the resolution will be considered by the governing body;
- The date, time, and location of the public hearing at which the resolution of taking will be considered;
- That the property owner or business owner may file written objections with the governing board prior to the public hearing at which the resolution of taking is considered; and
- That any interested party may appear and be heard at the public hearing at which the resolution of taking is considered.

If a property owner challenges an attempt to acquire his or her property by eminent domain under this section, the condemning authority must prove by clear and convincing evidence in an evidentiary hearing before the circuit court that:

- The public purpose of the taking is to eliminate an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain;
- The property is condemnation eligible because conditions on the property pose an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain; and
- Taking the property by eminent domain is reasonably necessary in order to accomplish the public purpose of eliminating an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain.

The circuit court must determine whether the public purpose of the taking is to eliminate an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain, whether the property is condemnation eligible, and whether taking the property is reasonably necessary in order to accomplish the public purpose of eliminating an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain. The circuit court must make these determinations without attaching a presumption of correctness or extending judicial deference to any determinations or findings in the resolution of taking adopted by the condemning authority.

Section 8. Amending s. 127.01, F.S.

Currently, s. 127.01, F.S., authorizes counties to exercise the right and power of eminent domain; that is, the right to appropriate property, except state or federal, for any county purpose. The absolute fee simple title to all taken property vests in the county unless the county seeks to condemn a particular right or estate in such property. Each county is further authorized to exercise the eminent domain power granted to the Department of Transportation by s. 337.27(1), F.S., the transportation corridor protection provisions of s. 337.273, F.S., and the right of entry onto property pursuant to s. 337.274, F.S.

However, no county has the right to condemn any lands outside its own county boundaries for parks, playgrounds, recreational centers, or other recreational purposes. In eminent domain proceedings, a county's burden of showing reasonable necessity for parks, playgrounds, recreational centers, or other types of recreational purposes is the same as the burden in other types of eminent domain proceedings.

The bill amends s. 127.01, F.S., to require strict compliance by counties with new s. 73.013, F.S., which limits the circumstances under which property taken by eminent domain may be transferred to private parties. (Please see Section 1 for detailed discussion of s. 73.013, F.S.)

Section 9. Amending s. 127.02, F.S.

Currently, s. 127.02, F.S., allows a board of county commissioners to, by resolution, authorize acquisition by eminent domain of property, real or personal, for any county use or purpose designated in the resolution.

This bill amends s. 127.02, F.S., to subject county acquisitions of real property to the restrictions on transfers to private parties provided in new s. 73.013, F.S., which is created by this bill. (Please see Section 1 for detailed discussion of s. 73.013, F.S.)

Section 10. Amends s. 166.401, F.S.

Currently, s. 166.401, F.S., authorizes all municipalities to exercise the right and power of eminent domain; that is, the right to appropriate property within the state, except state or federal property, for the uses or purposes authorized pursuant to part IV of ch. 166, F.S. The absolute fee simple title to all taken property vests in the municipal corporation unless the municipality seeks to condemn a particular right or estate in such property. Each municipality is further authorized to exercise the eminent domain power granted to the Department of Transportation in s. 337.27(1), F.S., and the transportation corridor protection provisions of s. 337.273, F.S.

This bill amends s. 166.401, F.S., to require strict compliance by municipalities with new s. 73.013, F.S., which limits the circumstances under which property taken by eminent domain may be transferred to private parties. (Please see Section 1 for detailed discussion of s. 73.013, F.S.)

Section 11. Amends s. 166.411, F.S.

Currently, s. 166.411(1), F.S., authorizes municipalities to exercise the power of eminent domain “[f]or the proper and efficient carrying into effect of any proposed scheme or plan of drainage, ditching, grading, filling, or other public improvement deemed necessary or expedient for the preservation of the public health, or for other good reason connected in anywise with the public welfare or the interests of the municipality and the people thereof.” Section 166.411(10), F.S., authorizes the exercise of the power of eminent domain “[f]or city buildings, waterworks, ponds, and other municipal purposes which shall be coextensive with the powers of the municipality exercising the right of eminent domain”.

This bill amends s. 166.411(1) and (10), F.S., to subject any exercise of power under these subsections to the restrictions on transfers to private parties provided in new s. 73.013, F.S., which is created by this bill. (Please see Section 1 for detailed discussion of s. 73.013, F.S.)

Section 12. Effective Date

This act takes effect July 1, 2006, and applies to all condemnation proceedings in which a petition of taking is filed pursuant to ch. 73, F.S., on or after that date.

C. SECTION DIRECTORY:

- Section 1. Creating s. 73.013, F.S.; restricting certain transfers of property taken by eminent domain to certain natural persons or private entities;
- Section 2. Amending s. 163.335, F.S.; providing legislative findings and declarations;
- Section 3. Amending s. 163.355, F.S.; requiring disclosure of eminent domain authority in resolutions finding slum or blight conditions; providing for notice to property owners and business owners or lessees and requirements therefor; providing for hearings and advertising requirements therefor;
- Section 4. Amending s. 163.358, F.S.; providing that the power of eminent domain does not vest in a community redevelopment agency but rather with the governing body of a county or municipality;
- Section 5. Amending s. 163.360, F.S.; requiring disclosure of eminent domain authority in community redevelopment plans;
- Section 6. Amending s. 163.370, F.S.; revising powers of community redevelopment agencies with respect to the acquisition of real property;
- Section 7. Amending s. 163.375, F.S.; revising eminent domain authority and procedures;
- Section 8. Amending s. 127.01, F.S.; requiring county compliance with eminent domain limitations;
- Section 9. Amending s. 127.02, F.S.; requiring county compliance with eminent domain limitations;
- Section 10. Amending s. 166.401, F.S.; requiring municipal compliance with eminent domain limitations;
- Section 11. Amending 166.411, F.S.; requiring municipal compliance with eminent domain limitations;
- Section 12. Providing an effective date.

II. FISCAL ANALYSIS & ECONOMIC IMPACT STATEMENT

A. FISCAL IMPACT ON STATE GOVERNMENT:

1. Revenues: Please see Fiscal Comments.
2. Expenditures: Please see Fiscal Comments.

B. FISCAL IMPACT ON LOCAL GOVERNMENTS:

1. Revenues: Please see Fiscal Comments.
2. Expenditures: Please see Fiscal Comments.

C. DIRECT ECONOMIC IMPACT ON PRIVATE SECTOR: Private property owners will not be required to relinquish their property under the Community Redevelopment Act for purposes of removing slum or blight conditions in a geographic area. Private property owners may realize economic benefits due to the ability to negotiate as willing sellers of property located in community redevelopment areas rather than through involuntary eminent domain proceedings. Private entities who may, today, acquire taken property for "non-traditional" economic uses will no longer be permitted to acquire ownership or control of taken property unless the transfer qualifies as an exception to the general prohibition provided in s. 73.013, F.S., as created in this bill.

D. FISCAL COMMENTS:

Impact of Local Governments: This bill eliminates authority under the Community Redevelopment Act to take property by eminent domain for the purpose of eliminating slum or blight conditions. Elimination of this authority may increase the cost to local government of assembling property, which cost may or may not be passed on to private developers. New s. 73.013, F.S., created by this bill, allows the transfer of taken property to a private entity for any use if the property is retained by the condemning authority, or a private party to whom property was transferred under one of the exceptions, for 5 years after acquiring title to the property. Requiring taken property to be retained for five years before the property may be transferred to a private entity for any use may result in some costs to the condemning authority, including costs of maintenance.

Impact on State Government: New s. 73.013, F.S., created by this bill, allows the transfer of taken property to a private entity for any use if the property is retained by the condemning authority, or a private party to whom property was transferred under one of the exceptions, for 5 years after acquiring title to the property. This provision applies to state agencies as well as any other condemning authority in the state. Requiring taken property to be retained for five years before the property may be transferred to a private entity for any use may result in some costs to a state agency condemning authority, including costs of maintenance.

III. COMMENTS

A. CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES:

1. Applicability of Municipality/County Mandates Provision: Not applicable because this bill does not appear to: require the counties or cities to spend funds or take an action requiring the expenditure of funds; reduce the authority that cities or counties have to raise revenues in the aggregate; or reduce the percentage of a state tax shared with cities or counties.

2. Other: See Current Situation for a general discussion of constitutional issues.

B. RULE-MAKING AUTHORITY: This bill does not address rule-making authority.

C. DRAFTING ISSUES OR OTHER COMMENTS: The bill creates s. 73.013, F.S., which allows the transfer of taken property to a private party for any use if the property is retained by the condemning authority, a governmental entity, or a private party to whom property was transferred for one of the authorized purposes, for 5 years after acquiring title to the property. On March 13, 2006, the Select Committee to Protect Private Property Rights recommended an amendment to this section to require public notice and competitive bidding prior to the transfer of taken property to a private party by a condemning authority, governmental entity, or private party to whom property was transferred for one of the authorized purposes. Due to a drafting error, however, the strike-all amendment adopted by the Local Government Council did not include the requirement for public notice and competitive bidding in the provision allowing transfers of taken property by a condemning authority or governmental entity.

IV. AMENDMENTS/COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE & COMBINED BILL CHANGES

On March 22, 2006, the Local Government Council adopted a strike-all amendment that incorporated amendments recommended by the Select Committee to Protect Private Property Rights at its March 13, 2006 meeting. The strike-all amendment:

- Removes authority to transfer taken property to a private entity if the property was taken under the Act to eliminate an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain. As a result, property taken under the Act may be transferred to private parties only if the transfer qualifies under one of the remaining exceptions;
- Retains the authority to transfer taken property after 5 years, but requires public notice and competitive bidding prior to the transfer unless otherwise provided by general law;
- Allows a city or county to take property under the Act if the purpose of the taking is to eliminate an existing threat to public health or public safety that is likely to continue absent the exercise of eminent domain as evidenced by at least one of a list of factors that indicate an existing threat. In short, the amendment more explicitly defines the conditions that constitute a threat to public health or public safety; and
- Adds language to require that notice must be posted to property to be acquired by eminent domain under the Community Redevelopment Act as well as mailed.

On March 28, 2006, the Justice Council adopted one amendment to the bill. This amendment adds language to require public notice and competitive bidding if a condemning authority or government entity wishes to sell taken property to another private party after 5 years. The language requiring public notice and competitive bidding was approved by the Select Committee but mistakenly omitted from the strike-all amendment adopted by the Local Government Council due to a drafting error.
