Significant amendments were recommended

I. Summary:

The bill revises current provisions in law relating to regional professional development academies, including:

- Repealing the authorization for start-up funds and the eligibility requirements for regional academies to receive startup funding;
- Repealing the requirement that a regional academy be self-supporting after the first year of operation;
- Repealing the requirement that a regional academy own or lease the facility in which it delivers training and maintain such facility; and
- Repealing the provision which indicates that an academy is not a component of any school district.

Under the bill, regional academies would now be required to:

- Receive and administer property, private and public funds, and income from training services;
- Specify in the contract that the income from intellectual property generated by school district personnel at a regional academy must be shared by the two entities; and

- Include greater specification for the contents and fiscal accountability within contracts between a regional academy and school districts. Such contracts must include:
 - Responsibilities for the prudent and lawful use of all public and private funds;
 - Documentation that funds received from the district are expended for authorized purposes and that services provided by the regional academy are commensurate to the amount paid by the district;
 - Provisions for making records available for inspection by the school board's auditor and the Auditor General;
 - Approval by the school board of participation by the academy in district programs or services, including the use of district facilities, equipment, and personnel;
 - Provisions for annually reporting activities and expenditures; and
 - Provisions for annual audits.

This bill substantially amends section 1012.985 of the Florida Statutes.

II. Present Situation:

Regional Professional Development Academies

The 1999 Legislature established regional training academies (regional academies) for the purpose of providing professional development opportunities for school personnel in each region of the state.¹ The regional academies would be operated in partnership with area business partners to develop and deliver high-quality training programs purchased by school districts.² The regional academies were required to be financed during the first year of operation by an equal or greater match from private funding sources and demonstrate the ability to be self-supporting within one year after opening through fees for services, grants, or private contributions.³ The regional academies were to be governed by an independent board and were additionally required to own or lease a facility to deliver training, provide professional development services to participating school districts, and to provide, in their discretion, professional development services to other school districts, private schools, and individuals on a fee-for-services basis.⁴ These requirements remain in current law.⁵ However, the statewide system did not materialize and the Schultz Center for Teaching and Leadership in Jacksonville, FL, became the only inservice professional development academy to sustain operation under the 1999 legislation.

The Schultz Center for Teaching and Leadership

In 1997, through private donations, including a $1 million grant, and state matching funds, the Schultz Center for Teaching and Leadership (Schultz Center) was established with the goal of raising student achievement by enhancing the professional skills of education professionals.⁶

The Schultz Center received $4 million in donations and used these funds as well as $4 million in matching funds to create a state-of-the-art professional development facility.⁷ At present, the

Schultz Center contracts with five school districts in the region⁸ and conducts professional development training for teachers, principals and other education professionals. The Schultz Center has also conducted research and training for the Department of Education and the Southern Regional Educational Board.⁹

The Schultz Center currently collaborates with area school districts and the University of North Florida to offer leadership training that includes:

- Aspiring Leader Academies (one year training for assistant principals);
- Principal Academies;
- Instructional Training for the Southern Regional Educational Leadership Board;
- Assistant Principal Candidate Training; and
- Professional Learning Communities.

To date, the Schultz Center has also provided professional development in fifteen instructional areas and has delivered more than eighty diverse workshops targeted to new teacher training, as well as training for the State University System.¹⁰

Audit Findings

The Auditor General (AG) reviewed the financial relationship between the Duval County School District and the Schultz Center in a FY 2003-2004 operational audit of the Duval County District School Board.¹¹ In the audit, the AG recommended that the school district monitor the reasonableness of goods and services provided to and exchanged with the Schultz Center.¹² In particular, the AG noted the following:

- The Duval County School District provided a substantial portion of the Center's support through cash and in-kind contributions. The Schultz Center provides training to teachers at public and private schools in the five county area; however, only the Duval County School District was required to provide cash and in-kind services to the Schultz Center for professional development services.
- The Duval County School District appeared to be incurring the cost for operating the Schultz Center and providing training-related funding, while simultaneously providing the majority of the Schultz Center's professional development services with the school district's own staff.
- After more than three years of operation, the Schultz Center was not operating on a self-supporting basis if it was required to pay its full operating costs.¹³

In 2006, the Legislature revised the enabling statute for the regional academy to provide that an academy, upon complying with the requirement for the first year of operation, is not to be a component of any school district or governmental unit to which it provides professional development services.¹⁴

For FY 2006-2007, the AG again reviewed the financial relationship between the Duval County School District and the Schultz Center in a financial, operational, and federal single audit of the Duval County District School Board.¹⁵ In the audit, the AG recommended that the school district take appropriate action to evaluate the Schultz Center's ability to operate on a self-supporting basis as statutorily required.¹⁶ In particular, the AG noted the following:

- The Schultz Center could not demonstrate the ability to be self-sustaining through fees for services, grants, or private contributions.¹⁷
- The school district is essentially incurring the costs for operation of the Schultz Center and is providing the majority of professional development with school district personnel.¹⁸
- The Schultz Center lease agreement generally requires that the school district be responsible for all facility operational, maintenance, and repair costs, in contravention of s. 1012.985(1)(g), F.S., which requires that the Schultz Center be responsible for those costs.¹⁹
- The school district's contracted payments to the Schultz Center of $3,796,767 for 300,000 hours of training do not appear to be an arm's length purchase of goods and services from a vendor. Again, much of the training was developed and provided by school district personnel as an in-kind service to the Schultz Center.²⁰

The Duval County School District did not concur with the AG's findings. In particular, the school district reported that the intent of its arrangement with the Schultz Center was that the center would pay for extensive renovations (approximately $8 million) to the building in consideration for future operational, maintenance, and repair costs.²¹

III. Effect of Proposed Changes:

The bill revises provisions relating to the statewide system for inservice professional development academies. In particular, the bill:

- Removes references in current law for start-up funding eligibility;
- Removes the requirement that a regional academy be financially self-supporting after one year of operation;
- Repeals the requirement that a regional academy own or lease the facility in which it delivers training;
- Repeals the provision which indicates that an academy is not a component of any school district.
- Removes the requirement that a regional academy pay for facility maintenance and operating costs;

- Requires greater specification for the contents and fiscal accountability of contracts between a regional academy and school districts;
- Authorizes a regional academy to receive and administer property, private and public funds, and income from training services; and
- Specifies that income from intellectual property generated by school district personnel at a regional academy must be shared by the two entities with such provisions included in the contract.

In effect, the bill currently affects only the operations of the Schultz Center. However, future regional academies, if they were established, would operate under the same enabling statute.

By removing the self-supporting and facility maintenance requirement, the bill addresses the audit criticisms that the Schultz Center was not self-sufficient or providing for facility maintenance as required in s. 1012.985, F.S. Nevertheless, the operating agreement between the school district and the Schultz Center would need to be revised.

Additionally, the federal awards audit issues under the Federal Single Audit, concerning whether the school district and the Schultz Center are operating at an arm's length in the purchase of goods and services, may remain.
