SUMMARY ANALYSIS

This bill enables vehicles owned, operated or leased by a county correctional agency to show or display blue lights when responding to emergencies.

Current law permits police and vehicles owned, operated or leased by the Department of Corrections to show or display blue lights when responding to emergencies. Presently, the jail facilities for nine of Florida's 67 counties are not operated by sheriff's offices. Thus, the vehicles owned, operated or leased by these facilities are not authorized to display blue lights.

The bill has no fiscal impact on state and local government, and an effective date of July 1, 2009.
