I. Summary:

SJR 396 limits any amendment to the Constitution proposed by the Taxation and Budget Reform Commission to “one subject and matter connected therewith.”

As a joint resolution, this legislation must be agreed to by three-fifths of the membership of each house of the Legislature. Then, the constitutional amendment proposed in the resolution will be placed on the 2020 General Election ballot, and will take effect if approved by at least 60 percent of the votes cast on the measure. The next Taxation and Budget Reform Commission convenes in 2027, and thus it would be the first Commission to be governed by the amendment.

II. Present Situation:

Overview

The Florida Constitution requires that a Taxation and Budget Reform Commission be established once every 20 years and that it have the authority to propose a revision of the “Constitution or any part of it dealing with taxation or the state budgetary process.” Although the Commission’s proposals are limited to this area of law, each proposal may nonetheless embrace multiple subjects within this area.

Taxation and Budget Reform Commission

Origin

In 1988, this state's voters approved a constitutional amendment that was proposed by the Legislature to create the Taxation and Budget Reform Commission.<sup>1</sup> The amendment specified that the Commission must convene for the first time in 2007, and once every 20 years afterward.<sup>2</sup>

Members

The Constitution requires that the Commission be comprised of 25 voting members and 4 non-voting "ex-officio" members. The 25 voting members must be appointed by the Governor (11), the Speaker of the House (7), and the Senate President (7). The 4 non-voting members must be chosen by the Speaker (2) and the Senate President (2) from the members of their respective houses; one of the two choices from each house must be from the minority party. At its initial meeting, the commissioners must elect a commissioner who is not also a legislator to serve as chair.

Task, Procedures, and Authority

The Commission is tasked with examining this state's budgetary process, revenue needs, and expenditure processes.<sup>3</sup> Upon examining these matters, the Commission must issue a report of the results of its review, and propose any recommended statutory changes to the Legislature. The Commission may also propose "a revision of this constitution or any part of it dealing with taxation and the state budgetary process."<sup>4</sup>

The constitutional provision giving rise to the Commission does little to prescribe how a Commission must go about its task. It says only that the Commission must elect a chair at its initial meeting, convene for further meetings at the call of the chair, adopt rules of procedure, and "hold [an unspecified number of] public hearings, as it deems necessary to carry out its responsibilities."<sup>5</sup>

The Single-Subject Requirement

Amendments that are Limited to One Subject

The Constitution authorizes five sources from which an amendment may originate: the Legislature, the Constitution Revision Commission, a citizen initiative, a constitutional convention, or the Taxation and Budget Reform Commission. As the Florida Supreme Court has repeatedly stated, "the citizen initiative is the only method that is constrained by the single-subject requirement."<sup>6</sup>

Policy Reasons for the Single-Subject Limitation on Amendments Originating as Initiatives

The Florida Supreme Court has also repeatedly explained the purposes for the single-subject requirement, at least with regard to citizen-initiative amendments. In its decision in Fine v. Firestone, the Court stated that the single-subject limitation allows the citizens to vote on singular changes in our government that are identified in the proposal and to avoid voters having to accept part of a proposal which they oppose in order to obtain a change which they support.<sup>7</sup>

Moreover, the Court stated, the single-subject limitation protects the Constitution “against precipitous and spasmodic changes in the organic law.”<sup>8</sup> Making a similar point in a later case, the Florida Supreme Court stated that the single-subject requirement in article XI, section 3, mandates that the electorate’s attention be directed to a change regarding one specific subject of government to protect against multiple precipitous changes in our state constitution.<sup>9</sup>

As to why this reasoning should not apply to prohibit multi-subject amendments that originate from other than a citizen initiative, such as the Taxation and Budget Reform Commission, the Court noted that the other methods of propounding a constitutional amendment “all afford an opportunity for public hearing and debate not only on the proposal itself but also in the drafting of any constitutional proposal.”<sup>10</sup> This is not true, the Court noted, of citizen initiatives.<sup>11</sup>

What “One Subject” Means

Over the years, the Florida Supreme Court has issued several opinions in which it explained what it means for an amendment to be limited to one subject.

In these opinions, the Court has stated, the single-subject limitation is “functional and not locational.”<sup>12</sup> In other words, the question is primarily one of what the amendment does, rather than a question of what part(s) of the Constitution it alters. As such, the single-subject limitation requires of each amendment a “natural and logical oneness of purpose.”<sup>13</sup> Moreover, the single-subject limitation prohibits an amendment from

(1) engaging in “logrolling” or (2) “substantially altering or performing the functions of multiple aspects of government.” . . . The term logrolling refers to a practice whereby an amendment is proposed which contains unrelated provisions, some of which electors might wish to support, in order to get an otherwise disfavored provision passed.<sup>14</sup>

And although “no single proposal can substantially alter or perform the functions of multiple branches,” the single-subject limitation does not prohibit a proposal that would “affect several branches of government.”<sup>15</sup> However, “how an initiative proposal affects other articles or sections of the constitution is an appropriate factor to be considered in determining whether there is more than one subject included in an initiative proposal.”<sup>16</sup>

A brief look at three Supreme Court opinions will help illuminate the Court’s understanding of these legal principles, and therefore of what “one subject” means.

In a recent advisory opinion, the Court analyzed an amendment that would have guaranteed a right for electricity consumers “to own or lease solar equipment installed on their property to generate electricity for their own use” while simultaneously ensuring that “State and local governments shall retain their abilities to protect consumer rights and public health, safety and welfare, and to ensure that consumers who do not choose to install solar are not required to subsidize the costs of backup power and electric grid access to those who do.”<sup>17</sup>

In the Court’s analysis of the amendment, it identified two basic “components”—the establishment of a right and a guarantee of the government’s authority to regulate that right. And the Court rejected the argument that these components embraced different subjects as a matter of law, stating instead that the components were “two sides of the same coin,” and were therefore “component parts or aspects of a single dominant plan or scheme,” and accordingly were “naturally related and connected to the amendment’s oneness of purpose.”<sup>18</sup> The Court also noted that the amendment did not engage in impermissible logrolling, as it did not combine a popular measure with an unpopular measure in hopes of compelling sufficient support for the unpopular measure.<sup>19</sup>

In another advisory opinion, the Court examined an amendment proposed by citizen initiative that would have created a “trust to restore the Everglades funded by a fee on raw sugar.”<sup>20</sup> The Court held that the amendment violated the single-subject rule because it “perform[ed] the functions of multiple branches of government.”<sup>21</sup> The amendment performed the legislative functions of imposing a levy, establishing a trust, and granting the trustees with power to set and redefine the boundaries of the “Everglades Ecosystem.” Additionally, the amendment “contemplate[d] the exercise of vast executive powers” by the trustees, including the “management, construction, and operation of water storage and sewer systems.”<sup>22</sup> Finally, the Court stated that the amendment would have performed a judicial function by essentially adjudicating that the sugar cane industry had polluted the Everglades and by imposing a judgment-like fee on that industry to cover cleanup costs.<sup>23</sup>

In yet another opinion, issued in Fine v. Firestone, the Court disapproved of a proposed amendment that contained three subjects.<sup>24</sup> But the Court did so without specifying that the subjects were related to the functions of various branches of government or that the amendment was an attempt at logrolling. Instead, the Court stated that the amendment limits the way in which governmental entities can tax; it limits what government can provide in services which are paid for by the users of such services; and it changes how governments can finance the construction of capital improvements with revenue bonds that are paid for from revenue generated by the improvements.<sup>25</sup>

Joint Resolution

A joint resolution by the Legislature is one of the ways in which an amendment to the Florida Constitution may originate.<sup>26</sup> Like a bill, it may begin in either house of the Legislature.

To pass the Legislature and be submitted to the voters, a joint resolution must be agreed to by three-fifths of the membership of each house of the Legislature.<sup>27</sup> Unless expedited by the Legislature, the joint resolution is then submitted to the voters at the next general election. If the amendment proposed in the resolution is approved by at least 60 percent of the people voting on the measure, it becomes effective in the January following the election unless otherwise specified in the amendment or in the Constitution.<sup>28</sup>

III. Effect of Proposed Changes:

The constitutional amendment proposed in the joint resolution, if approved by the voters at the general election in 2020, requires that any amendment proposed by a future Taxation and Budget Reform Commission be limited to “one subject and matter connected therewith.”

Because the wording of the single subject requirement for Commission proposals is identical to that used in the Constitution for citizen initiatives, the Supreme Court will likely presume that the single-subject requirements are the same.<sup>29</sup>

C. Government Sector Impact:

The Department of State, Division of Elections, provided the following information regarding the cost of advertising the proposed amendment contained in the resolution:

The Division of Elections is required to advertise the full text of proposed constitutional amendments in English and Spanish[ ] twice in a newspaper of general circulation in each county before the election in which the amendment shall be submitted to the electors. The Division is also required to provide each Supervisor of Elections with English and Spanish booklets or posters displaying the full text of proposed amendments, for each polling room or early voting area in each county. The Division is also responsible for translating the amendments into Spanish. The statewide average cost to advertise constitutional amendments, in English and Spanish, in newspapers for the 2018 election cycle was $92.93 per English word of the originating document.

Using 2018 election cycle rates, the cost to advertise this amendment in newspapers and produce booklets for the 2020 general election could be $58,174.18, at a minimum. Accurate cost estimates cannot be determined until the total number of amendments to be advertised is known. ...<sup>30</sup>
