COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTE - Substantial Changes

I. Summary:

CS/SB 802 revises the Marketable Record Title Act to clarify an exception to its main provision, and to bolster current law’s prohibition on discriminatory deed provisions.

The Marketable Record Title Act (MRTA) extinguishes most interests, claims, and other real property “rights” that were not created in or after a given property’s “root of title,” which is the most recent title transaction (such as a deed) that is more than 30 years old. The bill, in contrast to a recent court opinion, provides that the rights extinguished by MRTA include restrictive covenants that were recorded in connection with a zoning regulation.

The MRTA also includes a list of exceptions, i.e., interest rights created before the root of title that are not extinguished by the act. One category of exceptions includes rights that are “disclosed” in the root of title. The bill increases the specificity required for the disclosure in the root of title to qualify for an exception.

The bill, consistent with prohibitions currently set forth in the Fair Housing Act, extinguishes “discriminatory restrictions” from title transactions, such as deeds, and expressly states the restrictions are unlawful, unenforceable, and null and void. The bill provides for summary removal of discriminatory restrictions from the governing documents of a property owners’ association.

Finally, the bill provides a grace period of one year for persons whose interests would otherwise be extinguished by the bill to file a notice and save their interests from extinguishment.

The provisions of the bill are intended to apply retroactively. The bill states that these sections are “remedial in nature” and are “intended to clarify existing law.”

The bill takes effect upon becoming law.

II. Present Situation:

The Marketable Record Title Act

The Marketable Record Title Act (MRTA)¹ was enacted in 1963 “to simplify conveyances of real property, stabilize titles, and give certainty to land ownership.”² To accomplish these goals, MRTA extinguishes most “rights” in real property that were not created in or after the “root of title.” The root of title is essentially the most recent title transaction (such as a deed) that is more than 30 years old.³

Applicability of the MRTA to Covenants Dependent on Local Land-Use Regulations

The statutes contain nine exceptions in which MRTA does not apply.⁴ MRTA extinguishes the following rights, subject to exceptions:

[A]ll estates, interests, claims, or charges, the existence of which depends upon any act, title transaction, event, or omission that occurred before the effective date of the root of title.⁵

MRTA extinguishes these rights regardless of how they are denominated in a deed or other instrument creating the right.

In Save Calusa Trust v. St. Andrews Holdings, Ltd.,⁶ 193 So. 3d 910 (Fla. 3d DCA 2016), the court addressed the issue of “whether a restrictive covenant, recorded in compliance with a government-imposed condition of a land use approval, is a title interest subject to extinguishment by MRTA.”⁷ The court held that the restrictive covenant was a governmental regulation, and not a title “interest” under MRTA, and thus was not subject to extinguishment by MRTA.

The court reasoned that the restrictive covenant was an inseparable part of a governmental action to rezone the property at issue. The issue thus became whether MRTA extinguishes zoning regulations.⁸ The court concluded that, based on MRTA’s language and case law, MRTA did not extinguish zoning regulations, including the one at issue in the case.⁹

Exceptions to Extinguishment under the MRTA

As noted above, MRTA includes a long list of exceptions—real property rights that MRTA expressly does not extinguish even if the rights were created in a pre-root instrument.

One exception is any right disclosed in a deed or other muniment of title¹⁰ recorded in the chain of title from the root title forward (including a right that arose prior to the root of title). The disclosure may not be made by a general reference unless specific book and page information is given. Section 712.03(1), F.S., provides:

Estates or interests, easements and use restrictions disclosed by and defects inherent in the muniments of title [such as a deed] on which said estate is based beginning with the root of title; provided, however, that a general reference in any of such muniments to easements, use restrictions or other interests created prior to the root of title shall not be sufficient to preserve them unless specific identification by reference to book and page of record or by name of recorded plat be made therein to a recorded title transaction which imposed, transferred or continued such easement, use restrictions or other interests

The Real Property, Probate and Trust Law Section of The Florida Bar believes that this provision should be clearer, particularly as to how specific a disclosure of a right needs to be for it to fall within the exception.¹¹ For example, in 2015 the Third District Court of Appeal¹² held that a reference to a pre-root restrictive covenant in several deeds was more than a “general reference” and was otherwise specific enough to meet the statutory definition; thus, the restrictive covenant was not extinguished by MRTA.¹³ The references at issue did not include a book and page number.

The court’s stated reasoning as to why the references were nonetheless specific enough was brief. The court stated that it agreed with the trial court and a certain expert witness’s assessment. Beyond that, the court noted that the references were specific enough so that the covenants were not “hidden” such that the transferees/owners would have been surprised by them. Thus, the court noted, its decision was consistent with “the core concern” of MRTA that “no hidden

¹⁰ “Muniments of title” are instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has by which said owner is entitled to defend the title. Muniments of title need not be recorded to be valid, notwithstanding that recording statutes do give good-faith purchasers certain rights over the rights of persons. 42 FLA. Discriminatory Real Estate Restrictions

Overview

Federal and state law prohibit discrimination on the basis of race and several other characteristics in the sale, lease, or use of real property. Nonetheless, discriminatory restrictive covenants and other instruments—relics of an era when real estate discrimination was legal—remain in the records of many, perhaps all, counties, and can still be found in a title search. Though these documents are not legally enforceable, their existence has troubled many people who have discovered that a property that they own or rent, or would like to own or rent, was once encumbered by a (enforceable) discriminatory restriction.¹⁵ However, current law does not appear to provide a way to strike or otherwise disavow these provisions in the public records.

Fair Housing Act

This state’s Fair Housing Act, which was closely modeled from the federal Act,¹⁶ broadly prohibits discrimination in the sale or rental of real property, including by way of racist restrictive covenants.

The Fair Housing Act’s main operative provisions relating to the sale, rental, and use of real estate are set forth in ss. 760.23(1) and (2), F.S.:

- (1) It is unlawful to refuse to sell or rent after the making of a bona fide offer, to refuse to negotiate for the sale or rental of, or otherwise to make unavailable or deny a dwelling to any person because of race, color, national origin, sex, handicap, familial status, or religion.
- (2) It is unlawful to discriminate against any person in the terms, conditions, or privileges of sale or rental of a dwelling, or in the provision of services or facilities in connection therewith, because of race, color, national origin, sex, handicap, familial status, or religion.

Moreover, s. 760.23(3), F.S., specifically prohibits discriminatory “notices” and “statements”:

- (3) It is unlawful to make, print, or publish, or cause to be made, printed, or published, any notice, statement, or advertisement with respect to the sale or rental of a dwelling that indicates any preference, limitation, or discrimination based on race, color, national origin, sex, handicap, familial status, or religion or an intention to make any such preference, limitation, or discrimination.

¹⁶ See 42 U.S.C. §§ 3601-19.

However, these provisions are subject to exceptions and exemptions, as set forth in s. 760.29, F.S. For instance, the prohibitions do not apply to the sale or rental of a single-family house by its owner, or to the rental of a small multi-unit building, such as a duplex, if the owner lives in one of the units. The Fair Housing Act also does not apply to prevent a religious organization from restricting the occupancy, sale, or rental of its facilities to members of its religion. Moreover, the act's prohibitions on discrimination on the basis of familial status "do not apply with respect to housing for older persons."

As for enforcement, the act authorizes a person who alleges that he or she has been injured by a discriminatory housing provision to pursue administrative and civil remedies. However, the act does not mention any opportunity for a homeowner to obtain a written determination that a discriminatory restriction on his or her own property is extinguished by the act or any other law. Similarly, the act does not allow a homeowners association, or a condominium or cooperative association, to forego its normal procedures for removing these provisions from a document affecting a parcel within the association.

Other States' Efforts to Erase or Otherwise Address Unenforceable Discriminatory Provisions in Public Records

At least a few states—California, Washington, and Ohio—have enacted statutes to address discriminatory real estate restrictions that, though they have long been unenforceable, linger in the public records as hurtful and shameful reminders of the past.

California's statutes address these discriminatory provisions in several ways. For instance, California requires a real estate agent, title insurance company, or county recorder, among others, to place a notice on each deed, declaration, or governing document provided to a person. The notice advises the recipient that any discriminatory provision in the document "violates state and federal housing laws and is void," and that the recipient may file a "modification document" with the "county recorder," along with a copy of the document containing the restriction, with the restriction stricken.¹⁷ If the county counsel agrees that the stricken provision is illegal and void, the modification document must be filed in the county records, and shall include a book and page reference to the original document.¹⁸

California also authorizes the expedited removal of any unlawful and void discriminatory provision from the governing documents of a condominium association or other "common interest development."¹⁹ Under this statute, the association must amend out the provision notwithstanding "any other provision of law or provision of the governing documents."²⁰

Washington's statutes contain a similar procedure, but also give a property owner, as well as an occupant or tenant, the option to file a declaratory action to have the provision "stricken."²¹

¹⁸ CAL. GOV'T CODE § 12956.2.

²¹ WASH. REV. CODE § 49.60.227.

Additionally, Washington’s statutes contain a provision declaring a long list of discriminatory real estate provisions to be “void.”²²

In Ohio, when a county recorder processes a transfer of “registered land,” he or she is required to “delete” from the sectional indexes “all references” to any discriminatory restrictive covenant affecting the land.²³

III. Effect of Proposed Changes:

The bill revises the Marketable Record Title Act’s to clarify an exception to MRTA, and to bolster current law’s prohibition on discriminatory deed provisions.

Disclosure Required to Qualify for MRTA Exception

The bill amends s. 712.03(1), F.S., to require more specificity in the disclosure required for a restriction a deed or muniment to fall under the exception for rights disclosed before the 30-year root of title. The bill requires a specific reference to the official records book and page number, instrument number, or plat. Alternatively, there must be an affirmative statement in a muniment of title to preserve the estate, interests, easements, or use restrictions created before the root of title.

Interests Extinguished by MRTA

Zoning Restrictions

The bill amends s. 712.04, F.S., to include covenants or restrictions based on a zoning requirement or development permit among the types of interests extinguished by MRTA.

The bill may affect older deed restrictions that depend on a zoning requirement or development permit. The bill provides that s. 712.04, F.S., may not be construed to alter or invalidate a zoning ordinance, land development regulation, building code, or other law or regulation to the extent it operates independently of matters recorded in the official records.

Discriminatory Restrictions

The bill amends s. 712.065, F.S., to extinguish “discriminatory restrictions” from title transactions, such as deeds, and expressly states that the restrictions are unlawful, unenforceable, and null and void. The bill, unlike the Fair Housing Act, provides no exceptions or exemptions from this provision. And though the bill “extinguishes” discriminatory restrictions as a matter of law, it does not require their redaction or removal from the official records of a county. Thus, documents containing these restrictions could be uncovered in a title search.

The bill provides for summary removal of discriminatory restrictions from the governing documents of a property owners’ association.

²² WASH. REV. CODE § 49.60.224.

²³ OHIO REV. CODE § 317.20(E)(2).

Finally, the bill provides a grace period of one year for persons whose interests would otherwise be extinguished by the bill to file a notice and save their interests from extinguishment.

Retroactive Application.

The bill includes three sections that are intended to apply retroactively. The bill states that these sections are “remedial in nature” and are “intended to clarify existing law.”

The bill requires any person with an interest in land which may potentially be extinguished by its terms, and whose interest has not been extinguished before July 1, 2020, to file a notice pursuant to s. 712.06, F.S.,²⁴ by July 1, 2021, to preserve such interest.

Effective Date

The bill takes effect upon becoming a law.

IV. Constitutional Issues:

A. Municipality/County Mandates Restrictions:

This bill does not require counties or municipalities to spend funds or limit their authority to raise revenue or receive state-shared revenues as specified in Article VII, s. 18 of the Florida Constitution.

B. Public Records/Open Meetings Issues:

None.

C. Trust Funds Restrictions:

None.

D. State Tax or Fee Increases:

None.

E. Other Constitutional Issues:

The bill includes three sections that are expressly intended to apply retroactively. The bill states that these sections are “remedial in nature” and are “intended to clarify existing law.” The Florida Supreme Court has developed a two-prong analysis for determining whether a statute may be applied retroactively.²⁵ First, there must be “clear evidence of ²⁴ Section 712.06, F.S., sets forth the information that must be included in the notice required under s. 712.05, F.S., for persons whose interests are to be extinguished by the operation MRTA and who wish to preserve and protect such interest or right from extinguishment.

²⁵ See, e.g., Florida Ins. Guar. Ass’n, Inc. v. Devon Neighborhood Ass’n, Inc., 67 So. 3d 187, 194 (Fla. 2011).

legislative intent to apply the statute retrospectively.”²⁶ If so, then the court moves to the second prong, “which is whether retroactive application is constitutionally permissible.”²⁷ Retroactive application is unconstitutional if it deprives a person of due process by impairing vested rights or imposing new obligations to previous conduct:

A retrospective provision of a legislative act is not necessarily invalid. It is so only in those cases wherein vested rights are adversely affected or destroyed or when a new obligation or duty is created or imposed, or an additional disability is established, on connection with transactions or considerations previously had or expiated.²⁸

Accordingly, a “remedial” or “procedural” statute may be applied retroactively, because these statutes do not create or destroy rights or obligations.²⁹ Instead, a remedial statute “operates to further a remedy or confirm rights that already exist” and a procedural statute provides the “means and methods for the application and enforcement of existing duties and rights.”³⁰ Finally, the Legislature’s labeling of a law as remedial or procedural does not make it so.³¹

Courts might determine that the bill’s retroactive provisions impair vested rights. By their nature and their terms, the provisions in question pertain to rights in real property. In fact, the bill acknowledges this in Section 6. However, Section 6 also provides a grace period for people whose rights would be affected by the bill to take steps to protect rights that would otherwise be extinguished by the bill.

Under the bill, a property owner could request this determination from the Department of Economic Opportunity.
