BILL: SB 688

INTRODUCER: Senator Berman

SUBJECT: Waivers of Exemptions of Applicable Assets

DATE: March 10, 2021

REVISED: _____

I. Summary:

SB 688 prescribes the method by which an individual may waive constitutional and statutory protections that prevent creditors from obtaining a judgment against certain assets, allowing the individual to pledge such assets as collateral. The bill provides that such protection can only be waived by specifically identifying the asset in a contract. The bill provides that language referring to “all of a person’s assets and rights ...” or general references only to the type of collateral are insufficient under the bill to waive such protection.

These changes are in response to a recent court case which held that mere contractual reference to “all assets” included certain property previously understood to be excluded from such an agreement.

Staff estimates that the bill will not affect local or state revenues.

The bill takes effect October 1, 2021, and applies only to security interests created after the effective date.

II. Present Situation:

Asset Protection from Legal Process

A creditor can collect money owed by filing an action for a judgment in state court. A judgment is an order of the court creating an obligation, typically a debt when creditors are involved. The creditor may then use that judgment to collect assets from the debtor. Chapter 222, F.S., contains exemptions that protect certain assets from legal process under Florida law, absent a waiver. Florida exempts the following assets against creditor claims in most situations:

- Homestead property (ss. 222.01-222.05, F.S.).
- Certain items of personal property (s. 222.061, F.S.).

- Certain disposable earnings of head of family (s. 222.11, F.S.).
- The proceeds of a life insurance policy (s. 222.13, F.S.).
- The cash surrender value of a life insurance policy and the proceeds of an annuity contract (s. 222.14, F.S.).
- Disability benefits payable from any insurance (s. 222.18, F.S.).
- Certain pension, retirement, or profit sharing benefits (s. 222.21, F.S.).
- Prepaid College Trust Fund moneys and Medical Savings Account funds (s. 222.22, F.S.).
- A debtor's interest in a motor vehicle, up to $1,000 in value (s. 222.25, F.S.).
- The debtor's interest in any professionally prescribed health aids (s. 222.25, F.S.).
- Social security benefits, unemployment compensation, or public assistance benefits; veterans' benefits; disability, illness, or unemployment benefits; alimony, support, or separate maintenance; and stock or pension plans under specified circumstances (s. 222.201, F.S.).

These exemptions have historically been construed liberally in favor of the consumer against creditors' claims to exempt property.¹ When a consumer enters a security agreement – a contract in which a debtor offers assets as collateral (“security”) to guarantee repayment – the contract describes what assets are offered as security. Historically, a contract's blanket offering of “all assets” as security has not been interpreted to include assets subject to these exemptions.²

An individual must take additional steps in order to offer certain exempt assets as collateral. For example, in the case of Florida's constitutional right to homestead exemptions, a contractual waiver of those rights must be “knowing, voluntary, and intelligent” to have any effect.³ As another example, certain wages are exempt from legal process.⁴ The wages exemption may only be waived in writing, in a separate document attached to the security agreement, which must contain mandatory waiver language in at least 14-point font.⁵

Sufficiency of Description for Collateral in Security Agreements

An effective description of collateral in a security agreement identifies the asset by specific listing; category; type of collateral; quantity, computational or allocational formula; or any method under which the identity of the collateral is objectively determinable.^{6,7}

Current law specifically provides that a description of collateral as “all the debtor's assets” or “all the debtor's personal property” does not reasonably identify collateral.⁸

Finally, current law provides that a description defined by “type” of collateral alone for a commercial tort claim or, in a consumer transaction, for a security entitlement, securities account, or commodity account, is not sufficient.⁹ For example, “all existing and after-acquired investment property” or “all existing and after-acquired security entitlements,” without more, would be insufficient in a consumer transaction to describe a security entitlement, securities account, or commodity account.¹⁰

Kearney Construction Co, LLC v. Travelers Casualty & Surety Company of America

A recent federal court case held that general, broad pledges of “all assets” waives ch. 222, F.S., protections.¹¹ In *Kearney Construction Company, LLC v. Travelers Casualty and Surety Company of America*¹² the debtor obtained a line of credit and pledged collateral in the contract as follows:

Grant of Security Interest. As security for any and all Indebtedness (as defined below), the Pledgor hereby irrevocably and unconditionally grants a security interest in the collateral described in the following properties[:] all assets and rights of the Pledgor, wherever located, whether now owned or hereafter acquired or arising, and all proceeds and products thereof, all goods (including inventory, equipment and any accessories thereto), instruments (including promissory notes)[,] documents, accounts, chattel paper, deposit accounts, letters of credit, rights, securities and all other investment property, supporting obligation[s], any contract or contract rights or rights to the payment of money, insurance claims, and proceeds, and general intangibles (the “Collateral”).¹³

The Eleventh Circuit considered whether this language included assets held in the debtor’s Individual Retirement Account (IRA). The debtor argued that the IRA should not have been included in all assets and was never intended to have been offered as collateral.¹⁴ The court found that the security agreement’s language constituted an “unambiguous pledge” of all assets, which includes those exempt under ch. 222, F.S.¹⁵ Kearney’s IRA was not specifically listed in the agreement, but the court concluded that the broad language of the contract “encompassed potential retirement accounts or funds, such as the [IRA] at issue here.”¹⁶

The courts did not address whether ch. 222, F.S., exemptions or ch. 679, F.S., description requirements should have any weight in interpreting the contract. The courts also did not explain what part of the security agreement encompassed the IRA. It is unclear if it was part of a specific collateral category such as a deposit account, investment property, general intangible, or another category,¹⁷ each of which could have different treatment.¹⁸

Federal law treats the use of any funds inside a tax-advantaged retirement account as a taxable distribution from that account.¹⁹

III. Effect of Proposed Changes:

Section 1 creates s. 222.105, F.S., which prescribes the method by which an individual may waive statutory exemptions protecting certain assets and accounts from creditors. The bill provides that such protection can only be waived by specifically identifying the “applicable asset” in a security agreement, rather than by general reference to “all assets” or to the general category of assets.

The bill provides that language referring to all of a person’s “assets and rights, wherever located, whether now owned or after acquired, and all proceeds thereof,” or of similar nature is not sufficient to waive the protections provided for in ch. 222, F.S. References only to the type of collateral are insufficient under the bill to waive such an exemption.

The bill defines “applicable assets” as those accounts and entitlements described in ss. 222.13-222.16, s. 222.18, and ss. 22.201-222.22, F.S., which include life insurance policies, cash surrender value of life insurance policies and annuity contracts; wages or reemployment assistance or unemployment compensation payments due deceased employees; disability income benefits; certain payments protected by the federal Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978; pension money and tax exempt retirement accounts; and assets in qualified tuition programs, medical savings accounts, Coverdell education savings accounts, and hurricane savings accounts. These accounts and entitlements, deemed “applicable assets,” are exempt under current law from the reach of creditors without a waiver.

Section 2 amends s. 679.1081(5), F.S., to provide that the accounts and entitlements identified in section 1 of the bill are not adequately described by general reference to the type of collateral. In order to include such an asset in a security agreement the asset must be described by specific reference to the individual asset as provided in s. 679.1081, F.S.

Section 3 provides that the bill applies to security interests created after the effective date of the act.

Section 4 provides the bill takes effect October 1, 2021.
