SUMMARY ANALYSIS

Chapter 460, F.S., is the practice act for chiropractic medicine that sets the minimum requirements for safe practice in the state. The Board of Chiropractic Medicine (Board), under the Department of Health (DOH) enforces the practice act, including licensure, monitoring, and ensuring safe practice of chiropractic professionals.

Currently, the Council on Chiropractic Education (CCE) is the only accrediting entity authorized to provide program accreditation for chiropractic education. The bill removes the CCE as the sole accrediting entity and instead allows any accrediting agency recognized by the U.S. Department of Education, including the CCE, to accredit chiropractic colleges for licensure purposes.

The bill has no fiscal impact on state or local governments.

This bill has an effective date of July 1, 2023.

FULL ANALYSIS

I. SUBSTANTIVE ANALYSIS

A. EFFECT OF PROPOSED CHANGES:

Background

Regulation and Licensure of Chiropractic Physicians

Chapter 460, F.S., is the practice act for chiropractic medicine that sets the minimum requirements for safe practice in the state. The Board of Chiropractic Medicine (Board), under the Department of Health (DOH) enforces the practice act, including licensure, monitoring, and ensuring safe practice of chiropractic professionals.¹

To obtain a chiropractic physician license by examination, one must:²

- Submit a complete application and pay an application fee;
- Be at least 18 years of age;
- Have graduated from a chiropractic college accredited by the Council on Chiropractic Education or its predecessor agency;
- Have completed at least 3 years of residence college work prior to graduation, consisting of a minimum of 90 semester hours leading up to a bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university;³
- Pass the National Board of Chiropractic Examiners certification exams I, II, III, and IV and physiotherapy exam;
- Pass the Florida Laws and Rules Exam;⁴ and
- Submit to background screening for criminal history.

Students in an accredited chiropractic college may practice chiropractic medicine without a license as part of their clinical training or under the direct supervision of a chiropractic physician as part of their course of study. Students in their final year of education at an accredited college may also apply for licensure and take all of the requisite exams, but must graduate before receiving their license.

Accreditation for Chiropractic Colleges

Chiropractic education generally includes a four-year doctoral graduate school program which includes classroom instruction and clinical training.⁵ Licensure laws generally require chiropractic education from an accredited chiropractic college. Accreditation is a process for validating an educational program which involves an external peer review board developing evaluation criteria and evaluating a program's curriculum, faculty, services and operations, clinical competency, and research to determine if the program meets recognized standards.⁶

³ For applicants who graduated from a chiropractic college before July 2, 1990, only 2 years of residence college work from an accredited college or university are required. However, anyone who graduated from a chiropractic college after July 1, 1990, must have been granted a bachelor's degree based on 4 academic years of study from an accredited college.

The U.S. Department of Education (USDE) does not accredit individual higher educational programs, but instead recognizes accreditation agencies to evaluate the individual educational programs for purposes of participating in USDE's federal student aid programs.⁷ Accreditation agencies are not required to apply for recognition with the USDE, but if an educational institution wants to participate in federal student aid programs and offer public financial aid to its students, it must be accredited by an agency which the USDE has recognized. Therefore, many accreditation agencies choose to apply for recognition with the USDE.⁸ The USDE currently recognizes approximately 63 accreditation agencies.⁹

Council on Chiropractic Education

The Council on Chiropractic Education (CCE) is a programmatic accrediting agency for Doctor of Chiropractic Degree Programs and Chiropractic Residency Programs. The CCE is the only national organization recognized by the USDE to accredit chiropractic education programs for its federal programs.¹⁰ The CCE's recognition as an accrediting agency was renewed by USDE on May 20, 2022, for a period of five years. There are currently 18 chiropractic colleges accredited by the CCE, three of which are in Florida.¹¹

Effect of the Bill

Currently, the CCE is the only accrediting entity named in statute to provide program accreditation for chiropractic education under ch. 460, F.S. This includes chiropractic education for licensure, restricted licenses, and chiropractic medical faculty certificates. Additionally, the continuing education courses required for renewing a certified chiropractic assistant certification must be approved by CCE-accredited chiropractic colleges.¹²

The bill removes the CCE as the sole accrediting entity and instead requires that accreditation must be from an accrediting agency recognized by the USDE. CCE is currently the only accrediting agency for chiropractic education recognized by the USDE.
